Why She is the Most Talked-of Bud in the "400"

MISS NORA LANGHORNE

THE most interesting question that now occupies the Four Hundred of New York and fashionable society everywhere concerns the future of Miss Nora Langhorne, the last and youngest of the five famous Langhorne sisters.

What will Miss Nora do to rival the brilliant matches and social achievements of her sisters?

It is an axiom in society that every Langhorne sister attains a higher pitch of social glory than the sister who came out before her. Everybody is confident that Miss Nora will live up to this rule. She has had innumerable advantages which her sisters missed, and it is perhaps no exaggeration to say that some disappointment will be felt if she marries anybody less than a king.

The Langhornes are a good old family of Virginia, and have their seat at Mirador, Albemarle County, in that State. Colonel Chiswell D. Langhorne was noted in his State as an after-dinner speaker and an exemplar of fine old Southern manners, but he was not particularly rich or famous on his own account. He was blessed with five daughters, and it was not until they grew up that the Langhornes acquired a national and international celebrity.

The eldest daughter, Miss Elizabeth Langhorne, married Moncure Perkins, who occupied a leading position in Virginia. She soon became a leader of society in Richmond and the State generally, and New York heard of her fame.

Within three years the second sister, Miss Irene Langhorne, married Charles Dana Gibson the creator of the American Girl in black and white. Some Southerners thought that an artist was hardly up to the lofty social position of the Langhorne sisters, but no sooner was he married than Mr. Gibson began to earn more money than any artist had ever made before and to acquire a reputation that put Raphael and Leonardo in the shade. England took him up, and Mrs. Gibson was presented to the King, and made a great success in London society. Thus Mr. C. D. Gibson justified himself as the husband of a Langhorne sister.

Then Langhorne sister No. 3, otherwise Miss Nannie Langhorne, married Robert Gould Shaw, who comes from an exceedingly blue-blooded Boston family. She took her place at the head of the Mayflower aristocracy.

After that Miss Phyllis, or sister No. 4, married Reginald Brooks, who belongs to the New York and Newport fashionable sets, and will inherit scores of millions of dollars from the Brooks and Higgins families.

Mrs. Shaw furnished the next wedding, for, having obtained a divorce from her Mayflower aristocrat, she soon afterward married Waldorf Astor, eldest son of William Waldorf Astor, who owns $200,000,000 of New York real property and lives in London. Young Mr. Astor does not suffer from any of the disadvantages which prevent his papa from making a great hit with the King and the British aristocracy. He is quite popular and can undoubtedly get himself elevated to the House of Lords if he be-

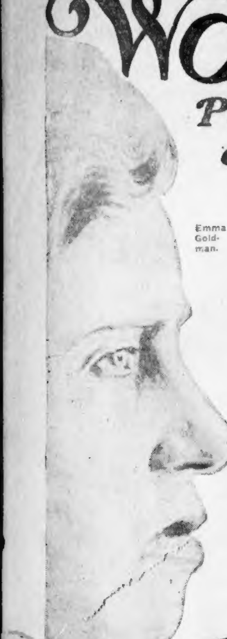
Worse Than Bombs

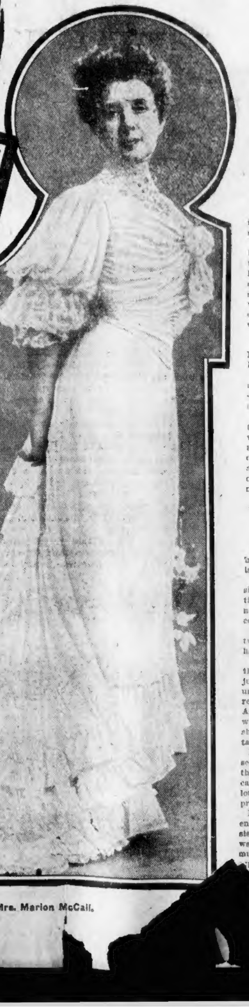
Peaceful but Terrifying Scheme of Women Anarchists to Become Spies in the Homes of the Rich and Expose Family Scandals and Business Secrets.



Emma Goldman.

Dr. W. E. Fischel's Residence, Washington Boulevard.

Mrs. Edith Adams.



Mrs. Marion McCall.

HAVE you ever suffered from personal dread of the anarchist—that your home or your place of business would be blown up by a bomb?

Well, you can forget that remote possibility now, and give your attention to an anarchist menace much worse than bombs; also, that is not only possible, but probable—in case you are vulnerable.

And it is not merely a menace; the blow has already fallen on several families socially prominent in St. Louis and in Chicago.

In the latter city, Mrs. Harold McCormick, who was Edith Rockefeller, is seriously ill over the shock of threats contained in letters, evidently from an anarchistic source.

In St. Louis, Mrs. Dr. W. E. Fischel has had a similar experience.

This new anarchist menace is nothing less than placing their spies in your home as servants—not to do you or your loved ones bodily injury, but worse

If you have skeletons in your closet, to drag them forth for your neighbors' delectation; if you are renowned for your charitable work but are parsimonious in your home, cruel to your wife and children and ill-treat your domestics, to show you up to the world in your true colors.

It is Emma Goldman's most enthusiastic disciple and lieutenant who is authority for the statement that this novel anarchistic crusade is now in progress. It was she who started it by becoming herself a servant spy in the home of a socially prominent St. Louis family.

This woman is Mrs. Edith Adams, keeper of a lodging house in St. Louis, where Emma Goldman was a guest while lecturing to her fellow anarchists in that city recently. The home which Mrs. Adams invaded as an anarchist spy in the guise of a housemaid is that of Dr. and Mrs. W. E. Fischel.

No member of the household suspected their capable maid was an anarchist d a spy. When she gave notice and t away they were sorry to lose her.

But now they are glad indeed that she not stay longer, for Mrs. Fischel has ived several letters from her late house- d in which she coolly confesses her ve in going out as a servant and s her late mistress that it will be for her to reform her methods of hold management.

most startling information from Mrs. is contained in her declaration that rvant-spy system which she introduced is now well established in several large cities of the country, notably St. Louis, Chicago, Cincinnati and New York.

Only families of wealth and social position are selected in placing the servant-spies, and especially families prominent in ethical culture circles or which are celebrated for their charitable work. For it is Mrs. Adams's theory that in families especially esteemed for their public benefactions, and which parade their interest in higher mental and moral development, will be found the most glaring inconsistencies in the way of domestic infelicity and neglect and cruelty toward servants.

Already Mrs. Adams claims to have proved the truth of this theory. Speaking for publication, she said:

"From my own experience and observation I know that the servants in many wealthy families are driven to a condition of physical and moral degeneracy.

"If I told you what I have seen while employed as a servant myself, you would not believe me. If you believed what I could tell you, you would not dare to print it.

"My sole object in going into the homes of the rich in the fashionable West End of St. Louis was to find out for myself how the women who belong to the Ethical Society and other so-called philanthropic societies for the betterment of women treated their own servants.

"I was a servant girl before I was married and became interested in the betterment of the condition of working men and women, and particularly the latter.

"I studied and read and attended lectures on sociological questions and attended many meetings of the Ethical Society. About five years ago I married and this gave me more time for study and thought.

"It became known that I had looked into the work of women more or less, and Mrs. Harvey G. Mudd, who was then concerned with the Consumers' League of women who were trying to lessen the hardships of girls who work in stores and factories, wrote me and asked for inside information as to conditions.

"Afterward she sent Miss Marie Peugnet to talk with me about it. I sent word that she would be doing a better work by investigating the lives of the slaves who worked for the families in the West End, who were compelled to labor from 14 to 18 hours a day, instead of raising Hades with the factories, as the household servants in the families of the rich were much more worth the sympathy and help of truly philanthropic women than the girls in the factories and stores who worked eight hours a day and had things comparatively easy.

"About a year ago I had been in correspondence with Mrs. W. E. Fischel, and one day I saw an advertisement for a servant in her house. Here was my chance to demonstrate my ideas on the subject.

"I went to work for Mrs. Fischel and I can say this—that the servants in the families in the West End are overworked until they become physical and moral degenerates.

"They are worked to death, until most of them should be in the hospital.

"They run up and down stairs all day long on the slightest whim of my lady, and when they go to bed at night they are wrecks.

"The factory and shop girls have their Sundays. The hardest day of the week for the servants is Sunday.

"Once a week they dress up and go out and gossip with other servants and then return to their slavery.

"Yet these rich and idle, thoughtless women wonder why they cannot get and keep capable servants.

"I know that the worst used women in America are the serving maids of the rich. The only practical means of bettering their condition is to give the widest publicity to the wrongs they suffer—to actually shame mistresses into treating their servants like human beings."

In St. Louis, if an anarchist bomb had exploded in the headquarters of the Society for Ethical Culture, consternation in that circle of fashionable society could hardly have been greater than that which has followed the publication of Mrs. Adams' statements.

Mrs. Fischel denied any remembrance of having employed a woman of that name. She had received letters from a Mrs. Adams, but considered her a harmless fanatic.

But Mrs. Adams was not to be silenced by any rebuffs of this sort. She declared that Mrs. Fischel was not the only fashionable St. Louis woman who had employed as housemaid one of the spies of this movement.

Being challenged to give names, she responded with the following: Mrs. R. C. Kerens, wife of the former Republican National Committeeman of Missouri; Mrs. Marion McCall and Mrs. Elias Michael.

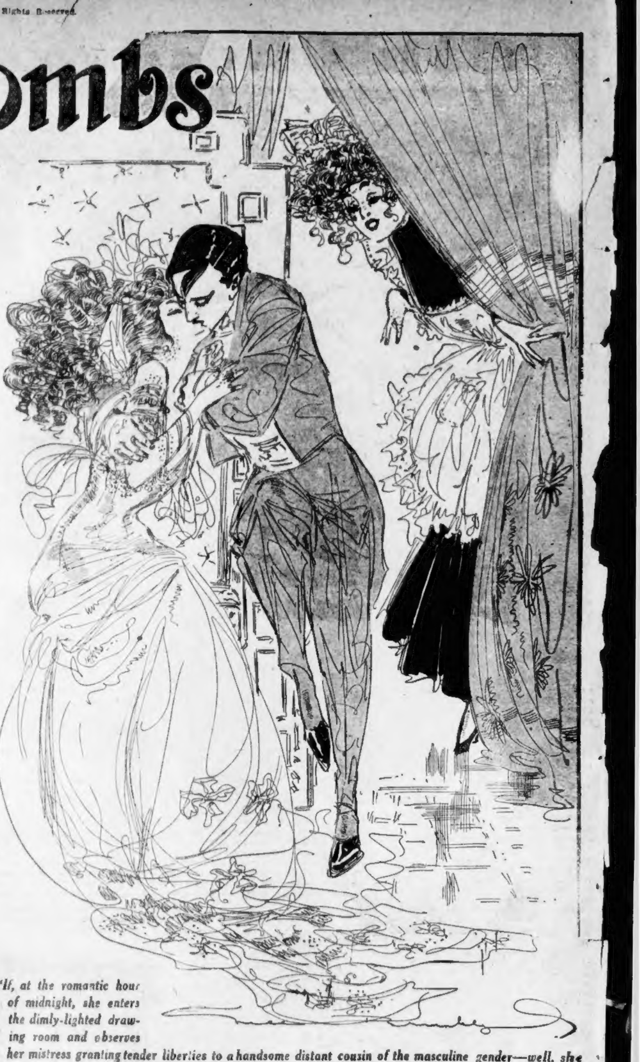
All of these, Mrs. Adams declares, are engaged in "alleged philanthropic work." The anarchists who have supplied them with housemaids will bring pressure to bear on them to enact real results in their own households, and not play with charity for amusement.

At one time Mrs. Adams was associated with James Eads How in his sociological work. This caused her to be a frequent visitor at the meetings of the Ethical Society. From those experiences she deduces that while the women members advocate ethical reforms in their meetings, they are guilty of "injustices and cruelties" as monarchs in their homes."

In St. Louis these housemaid spies make their reports to Mrs. Adams. During this month she expects to be kept informed of the true conditions in the homes of at least a dozen prominent families. Her programme of action is all prepared.

Where she finds that hardships are forced upon the maids she will first write to the delinquent mistress a detailed statement of matters in which the latter is remiss, and ask her to effect the desired reforms.

If this letter gains no reply she will write again, and at the close of her letter she will say:



"If, at the romantic hour of midnight, she enters the dimly-lighted drawing room and observes her mistress granting tender liberties to a handsome distant cousin of the masculine gender—well, she is only a house maid in need of a cast-off gown."

"If the conditions mentioned that exist in your house are not improved, other steps will be taken."

This sounds like a mild form of "Black Hand" threat. But there is a difference that seems to be most disquieting to St. Louis society. As no money is demanded, and only injustices to household domestics sought to be repaired, Mrs. Adams cannot well be placed in the blackmailer class, even though her letters may contain half-veiled threats.

"Other steps will be taken!"

Coming from an anarchist, that can hardly be called a reassuring message. Does it mean public scandal?

Who are in a better position than housemaids—when their main duty is that of spy—to discover the real character of the master and mistress of the house?

Mrs. Adams, an expert, is authority for the statement that in the homes of these vulnerable masters and mistresses housemaids' hours are as many as eighteen out of the twenty-four. It is an old axiom among mistresses that "servants don't count." If the loyalty of servants were not taken for granted, the novels of Alexander Dumas, the elder, would have lacked their most thrilling episodes.

So the housemaid spy not only knows how herself and her fellow servants are treated, but she knows how the master and mistress treat each other.

She is on duty practically day and night. If, at the romantic hour of midnight, she enters the dimly lighted drawing room and observes her mistress in the master's absence granting tender liberties to a handsome distant cousin of the masculine gender—well, she is only a housemaid in need of a cast-off gown!

But when the house maid is an anarchist spy, the case is different. The cast-off gown will not "square" matters. Now comes the ultimatum—"reform, or be known to the world for what you are!"

Scandal—that is the dynamite in this new anarchist bomb. It is scandal enough when it is made public that you treat your servants as beasts of burden. But suppose you have worked up a great reputation for general philanthropy and it all comes out in print that you could not resist the attractions of your wife's pretty maid—who happens to be an anarchist spy?

The particular social bete noir of Mrs. Adams appear to be those benevolent inquiries of rich philanthropists which pry into the private lives of servants. There is a School of Philanthropy which sends out account books in which servants in rich families are urged to set down in detail what they earn and how they spend it. Says Mrs. Adams:

"They not only want to know the cost of our living, but ask us to tell the cost of our funerals."

So the anarchists are putting the shoe on the other foot. While the ostensible philanthrophists are invesigating the servants, they are investigating the masters and misresses.

Anarchists are not the least intelligent people in the world. Probably these anarchist servant-spies are able to go about their work so discretely that no suspicion on the part of their victims will rest against them.

They have every opportunity to learn all there is to be learned, and then retire to a safe place to await the destruction caused by the scandal bomb's explosion.

Why She Is the Most Talked-of Bud in the "400."

His beautiful wife, being a Langhorne sister, has naturally taken a leading position in British society. His Majesty likes nothing better than to listen to her bright conversation in soft Virginia accents.

"That little Mrs. Astor makes me feel twenty years younger," he is reported to have said.

This brings us to Miss Nora, No. 5 in the galaxy of Langhorne sisters. She has just been brought out in New York society under the distinguished auspices of her relative by marriage, Mrs. John Jacob Astor. Her sister, Mrs. Waldorf Astor, was present to make sure that the affair should be a great success, which it certainly was.

Now Mrs. Waldorf Astor is going to present her sister to the King, and it is felt that the most interesting part of her social career will be in London, although she belongs to a social set that divides its time pretty evenly between the two continents.

Miss Nora enters society with all the enormous wealth and prestige of all her sisters behind her. She will not have to wait for social success, as some of them must have done. She will profit by their perience. She will be able to avoid any takes which they may have made. She step at once into the centre of the l stage.

all the Langhorne sisters, she is They are not remarkably alike for sisters, and each one has a distinctive charm of her own. Mrs. Gibson is the tallest and most statuesque. Mrs. Astor is the prettiest and most wins . Mrs. Brooks is the most dashing on horseback. Now there are many connoisseurs who declare that Miss Nora combines the finest points of all of them, and therefore surpasses all of them in beauty. Those who do not know her may have the opportunity of forming their own opinion on this point from the portrait, which is here published for the first time.

If Miss Nora is to make a more brilliant match than her sisters it must be for something more than money. She can hardly find a richer husband than Waldorf Astor, nor one who could occupy a higher social position in America if he wished it.

These facts indicate that Miss Nora's friends and relatives expect her to marry a titled European, and he must be one of very much higher rank than any who has yet won an American girl in order that the match may come up to the Langhorne tradition of climbing higher every time.

To meet the requirements of this case the man must be a prince of royal blood. The prospect of an engagement between Miss Langhorne and Prince Francis of Teck, the brother of the Princess of Wales, has already been widely discussed. The Prince is a good-looking fellow, and his only defect from a social point of view is the lack of an income commensurate with his relationship to the heir to the throne.

It is believed that Mr. William Waldorf Astor, whose desire for social distinction is almost frantic, would pay handsomely for the privilege of being connected by marriage with the royal family.

But is Prince Francis of Teck high enough for Miss Nora Langhorne? That is the question that now agitates her friends. He is a descendant of a German prince by a morganatic marriage. His family rose a little in importance when his father married the daughter of the Duke of Cambridge and a cousin of Queen Victoria. His present near relationship to the royal family was rather a lucky accident, as his sister was chosen by Queen Victoria on account of her robust constitution to be a suitable wife for the Prince of Wales, who is very delicate.

Prince Francis is not a royal highness, and he is not treated as a person of any importance at Continental courts. He is incomparably inferior in rank to the Duke of the Abruzzi, who is first cousin of a reigning king by direct blood relationship.

Now, why should Miss Langhorne have a suitor inferior in rank to Miss Elkins's duke? The mere question seems an absurdity. No position is too high for a Langhorne sister. The fashion of royal princes marrying American girls has been introduced, and it is confidently expected that the fifth Langhorne sister will eclipse all previous performances, according to the custom of her family, and that within a year she will have a prince near in succession to a European throne at her feet.

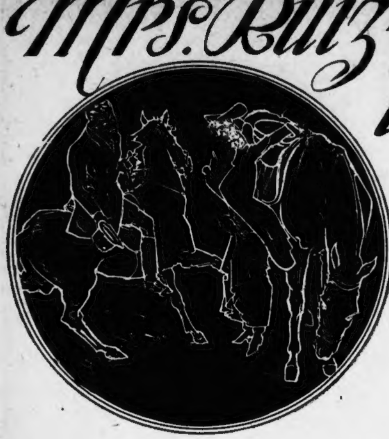
Mrs. Ruiz—"The Woman in the Case?"

The Romantic Meeting of Alfred Vanderbilt with the Demure Little Charmer in Central Park One Year Ago—And What Has Happened Since Then.



"Mrs. Ruiz's first meeting with Mr. Vanderbilt was most romantic—it happened in Central Park, a year ago. One morning as Mme. Ruiz was taking her inevitable daily gallop through the park, the groom at her bidding having ridden ahead, she suddenly leaped from her saddle. She stood a picture of helplessness beside her horse, appealing with the bright brown eyes and a half smile, half pout to passers-by. The first male mount responded politely to her mute appeal. A serious-faced, full-lipped, smiling-eyed young man, sprang from his horse and lifted his hat.

"'May I assist you?' he asked eagerly.

"It was Mr. Vanderbilt."

"Mrs. Ruiz is comely in a petite way, with dark eyes, deep set, outlined by heavy brows and lashes. She sits like Diana in her saddle and her taste in dress is exquisite."

WHO is Mrs. Ruiz? Who is the young woman on whom Mr. Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt found time to call the evening before he was booked to sail for Europe, the other day, although he had not found it convenient to call on Mrs. Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt?

Mr. Vanderbilt has gone to Europe.

Mrs. Vanderbilt is in retirement with her relatives at Tuxedo, just outside of New York.

Mrs. Ruiz is preparing to sail for Europe.

Mrs. Ruiz is as modest as she is pretty—she desires no public notice of her friendship with the head of the Vanderbilt family. In fact, she deplores the curious accident by which it became known that New York City contained such a charming little personage as Mrs. Ruiz.

Mystery has surrounded every circumstance about the woman except her name: it has covered her as with a garment. She is a Mme. Ruiz. That is all her neighbors knew, all she herself would tell, all that the young man who made his last call upon her before taking ship would say.

In an apartment in the block that begins with the smoky, unsightly viaduct covering the New York Central tracks and that ends in the traffic of upper Lexington avenue, in New York, on the gray painted brick building which is filled except for her by trained nurses who are resting between cases, lives Mme. Ruiz. To call upon her the young multi-millionaire must approach by way of the ugly viaduct, or amidst the democratic traffic of Lexington avenue, which cannot by any strain of imagination be called fashionable. In the region of the Post-Graduate Nurses' building it is given over to shops and rooming houses and the cheaper grade of dwellings. It was to this environment Mme. Ruiz moved a year ago, a few weeks after she had met Alfred Vanderbilt.

Thither she moved from the Savoy Hotel, where she had long been a guest. The contrast in the manner of living must have been acute to Mme. Ruiz. There was the difference between the gay sunshine that is the habitat of the butterfly and the darkness that surrounds the grub. Mme. Ruiz made the change of residence, quietly, inexplicably, leaving her friends to guess what hidden, powerful influence had caused this strange new setting up of her gilded household gods.

"Will You Walk Into My Parlor?"

Except for the subdued setting of her apartment there was no visible change in her manner of living. She was still most smartly gowned. She still rode or drove in the park every morning. A smart saddle horse was brought to her door—or a high trap or a victoria. In the last were a coachman, a footman, wearing her green livery. Delivery wagons from the smartest shops came to her door early every day bringing valuable parcels. She was seen at matinees at the theatres, usually attended by her maid, a silent, shadowy sort of woman, whose dull eyes follow every movement of her mistress with dog-like devotion. She was generous to her dependents, as always, feeing the ushers at theatres, the saleswomen who waited upon her at the shops, and her servants lavishly. No, it was quite clear there had been no diminution of Mme. Ruiz's income. Rather it had been augmented. This was manifest when a magnificent automobile took the place of the trap and victoria, though the coachman and footman in green remained.

There was some embarrassment about this automobile a few months later. Harry Brenchley, in charge of the Vanderbilt stables, had purchased the machine. He said he was purchasing it for a lady, but that his employer did not want to appear in the matter. When Brenchley had eloped to Europe, presumably with a fair but foolish member of society, the account was still unsettled. The man who had sold the automobile became anxious, then incensed. He sent to Alfred Vanderbilt a demand that the $11,000 for the automobile be paid. Mr. Vanderbilt made no direct reply, but the next day, lo and behold, appeared Mrs. Ruiz. That lady wrote a check for the amount and politely regretted "the oversight."

When, a few days before his departure, the rumors that Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt had permanently separated and there was a probability of divorce, detectives on and off the press followed him to the door of No. 596 Lexington avenue. He entered none of the humble apartments occupied by the trained nurses. With hat in hand he stood before Mme. Ruiz's door until there was a swish of silk, a waft of perfume and a greeting from a pleasant voice within. Then Mr. Vanderbilt, smiling, disappeared inside.

Glimpses of Mme. Ruiz revealed that she was comely in a petite way. Of five feet four inches in height, her weight is one hundred and fifteen pounds. She has dark eyes, rather deep set for a woman, and outlined by heavy brows and lashes. Her features are fairly regular. Her smile is illuminative. One who knows her best says she has a homelier walk and more charming manners than any other woman in New York. The traces of a humble origin cling about her in that walk. It is heavy, springless. She bends forward and walks haltingly, indicating an indecisive mind. By one of the anomalies of feminine acomplishments, while she walks awkwardly, she rides with perfect grace. She sits Diana-like in her saddle. But besides her exquisite taste in dress she has a chief charm. It is that she has a most winsome manner.

Who is this mysterious, alluring Mme. Ruiz?

The Spider and the Fly.

It required long, painstaking investigation to clear the mist that hung about her. "She is an amiable woman, but most conservative." "She is the quietest woman I ever knew." "She is modest as the violets," say her acquaintances. "I never heard her mention a word about her real self," they add. "She will talk about any other subject under the sun, but of herself, she is mute."

Mme. Ruiz's first meeting with Mr. Vanderbilt was most romantic—it happened in Central Park, a year ago. One morning as she was taking her inevitable daily gallop through the park, the groom at her bidding having ridden ahead, she suddenly leaped from her saddle. She stood a picture of helplessness beside her horse, appealing with the bright brown eyes and a half smile, half pout, to passers-by. The first male mount responded politely to her mute appeal. A serious faced, full lipped, smiling eyed young man, sprang from his horse and lifted his hat.

"May I assist you?" he asked eagerly. It was Mr. Vanderbilt.

"Thank you so much. I felt my saddle slipping and jumped off. You see the stupid thing has turned. My groom has ridden ahead to try to find a friend I expected to meet this morning. Oh, thank you if you will be so kind. Thank you. Thank you."

In a trice the young man of millions had tightened the saddle, had assisted the pretty equestrienne to her seat, and, lifting his hat as the groom returned, had continued his ride.

But shortly afterward Mme. Ruiz had gone alone to the races at Saratoga. There also appeared Mr. Vanderbilt. The acquaintance, begun so romantically, was renewed. It continued until Mr. Vanderbilt's departure for Europe. Almost simultaneously Mrs. Ruiz sailed for the other side. In London the friendship continued. There it included the ill-fated Florence Schenck, the beautiful belle of Norfolk, Va., and Charles Wilson, the head of Mr. Vanderbilt's stables, with whom she had eloped. It was to Mme. Ruiz that Wilson, on their return from Europe, when the couple parted stormily at the dock, alluded.

"If you must talk to the newspapers about our affairs at least don't talk about" —and her elderly admirer looked threateningly at her.

"I know what you mean, Mme. R. I mean Mr. Vanderbilt. No, I will not," she said, and Florence Schenck, though angered and broken-hearted by Wilson's perdidy, kept the other woman's secret.

In London Mme. Ruiz had been an admired figure about the paddocks, Mme. Ruiz had been seen at the gay restaurants in London and driving about the English lanes, her chief escort on these occasions being Mr. Vanderbilt. It was this secret that Florence Schenck had kept.

Almost immediately after the romantic meeting in the park, directly after the renewed acquaintance at the race track, arose the rumor that Mrs. Vanderbilt had practically separated from her husband. These rumors culminated last month, when Mr. Vanderbilt took his long lease of a London apartment.

Prior to the meeting with Mr. Vanderbilt the life of Mme. Ruiz had assumed varied aspects.

The story of her marriage to Antoine Ruiz is one of a speedy ceremony following a swift courtship—one, to be exact, of three days' acquaintance. Antoine Ruiz was the scion of a wealthy Cuban family. At Saratoga he had met the dark-eyed young woman from New York on a Monday morning. On Wednesday evening he stood before a magistrate in the town of springs and races solemnly plighting his life-long troth to his fascinating new friend.

His bride told him she was Miss Belle Hilton. She declared that she was from one of the good, but impoverished families of California. She was—this wedding took place perhaps seven years ago—at that time twenty-three years old.

Gradually, as the span of their married life passed into a year, two years, three years, the young man from Cuba discovered other facts about his bride. He found that, without the need of a writing or stage name, for she had neither of these occupations, she had been known by various names. Among these was Belle O'Brien and Belle Baudoine.

And as her names had been various, so had her physical aspects. Those who knew her first when she arrived in New York ten years ago, a woman of determined character, subdued by the gentlest of manners, recall that she weighed nearly two hundred pounds. This enormous weight she has gradually, by some mysterious system of banting, reduced to one hundred and fifteen pounds. From being an amazon she had become a sylph. To a woman of such determination all things were possible.

Yet, though he had begun to look upon his wife as a charming protean creature, more to be admired than trusted, Antoine Ruiz took her to Havana, where his family, after a brief, delighted survey, took her to its bosom. She was accepted by the best society of Havana. When he took her to Europe her reception was the same. It was only in New York that she was dubiously regarded, and in that suburb of St. Louis where she had spent her girlhood.

When a few years ago they returned to New York, the Latin jealousy that had slumbered in him sprang fully awake. The wealthy Cuban set about tracing his wife's past as a genealogist searches among the family tree for ancestral twigs.

He found that she had once lived at the Glenmore Hotel, bearing there one of her names. That subsequently, in a generously furnished room, she had lived in East Seventy-sixth street, where the sun of opulence shone upon her little menage. From this point of vantage she drove forth in handsome equipages, always with her own green livery. Sprightly rumors clung about this house. The most frequent visitor was a multi-millionaire of hasty temper, so hasty that when he learned that the then Miss Belle Hilton was in love with another and lesser caller, he angrily took himself off, and the neighborhood saw him no more. With him departed her affluence.

Among those who met her frequently the comment passed: "Belle Hilton has her ups and downs. Last month she had a house, five servants and three turnouts. She appeared in a new gown every day for a hundred days. Now she hasn't a cent."

Further back the jealous Cuban traced the movements of his bride, back through devious ways in New York, back to the St. Louis period of her brief but varied existence. Back to parents for whom he professes no respect.

When he had finished this painful digging into the depths of his wife's past, young Ruiz sued for a divorce. Among the scattered archives of the defunct office of Howe & Hummel the young man's complaint, with its many and serious charges, exists. Two years ago, the friends of the husband assert, he quietly secured his divorce, though by some magic as mysterious as the atmosphere surrounding Mrs. Ruiz, the public record of that action has disappeared.

Madame Belle O'Brien-Baudoine-Hilton-Ruiz is a woman of frequent absences from New York. Journeys South and West, coast cruises and many transatlantic crossings occupy her. She lives alone, except for a young butler she calls Frank, who is major domo of her household. She is always richly and tastefully gowned. She has the smiling air of one content with her portion of the world's goods. Her perennial interest and undying fad is horsemanship. Mr. Vanderbilt is an enthusiast about horses.

The stables, Mrs. Vanderbilt, who only a few years ago was Miss Elsie French, confesses, bore her. She is concerned these drab Lenten days with one sole interest, the health of her little son. About her there is not the slightest shade of mystery.

How to Select Your New Wall Paper.

THIS is the season of the year when the souls of the housewives are vexed over the question of wall paper designs. The decorator sends around a thick book of samples, and you struggle to imagine how such designs would look on your walls.

The longer you "cudgel your brains" over the matter the more confused you are apt to get. So here are some general rules which may help you.

There are three things to consider when selecting one's wall paper. First, the aspect of the room; secondly, the design of the paper; thirdly the loftiness of the apartment.

In settling the first question, one must realize that a room with a northern aspect must on no account be given a cool-looking color such as pale blue, green, etc.; for north rooms look best when treated to a vivid poppy-red color, a golden sunset yellow, or a terra-cotta. An east room may be treated to pinks, warm greens, yellows, reds or a terra-cotta. A south room would have mauve, pale blue, pale green, cream, or any such delicate tint; while a west room would require almost similar treatment, red being rigorously excluded.

Nowadays we are more in favor of papers with diaper or small designs, and it must be borne in mind that such papers are wholly inoffensive and quite good in their way, as are also the plain self-colored papers. The self-colored paper of conventional design is also a good one to employ, but the size of the design must be regulated to the size of the room, a large design having a dwarfing effect upon the apartment. If a room be low pitched, a striped paper carried from ceiling to skirting-board will give an apparent [illegible] which it does not possess. Lofty roo may be given a deep frieze, which will break up the wall surface and produce a different decorative effect.

A dark paper will make a small room appear smaller, a light paper doing contrary duty. There are nowadays some exceedingly pretty papers with cream grounds and handsome floral friezes which are adorned with trails of foliage arrang to break the wall up into a series of pictures. These are exceedingly desirable, and where one does not possess many pictures they will be found distinctly useful.

The floral papers of the present day are quite works of art, and may be safely employed for the decoration of sitting rooms, bedrooms, etc., while quite the latest papers are made to reproduce the designs of the chintzes and tapestries of early Vic torian days.

Concerning color schemes, it is quite saf to adopt a striped or conventional desig paper for halls and staircases, dining room and reception rooms generally, papers of small diaper design, stripes or floral p terns being devoted to bedrooms, the flo paper being also employed very effectiv for sitting rooms.

The nursery wallpapers form yet ano branch and are exceedingly attractive adays, generally depicting in some qu fashion a succession of nursery rhyme having a plain wall surface crowned weird frieze.

FREEZING OUT YOUR WRINKLES.

Your Face Will Never Grow Haggard if You Ice Your Face Muscles, Declare the Enthusiastic Beauty Doctors and So it's Very Fashionable to Freeze Yourself.

CURING THE DOUBLE CHIN WITH AN EXTRA SIZED LUMP OF ICE.

By Mme. Julia Mays.

HAVE you taken the new ice beauty treatment? Are you freezing out your wrinkles, or are you using the new cold cure for fat?

It is the latest discovery of the progressive beauty cult. It renders the muscles firm. It gives a youthful contour to the face. It removes wrinkles. It gives a fine, healthy glow to the cheeks. It clears the complexion, giving it the fresh whiteness of a babe's skin. For these reasons it is welcome to those who would look young.

It removes the ugly, disfiguring double chin. For this reason it is a welcome discovery to the fat.

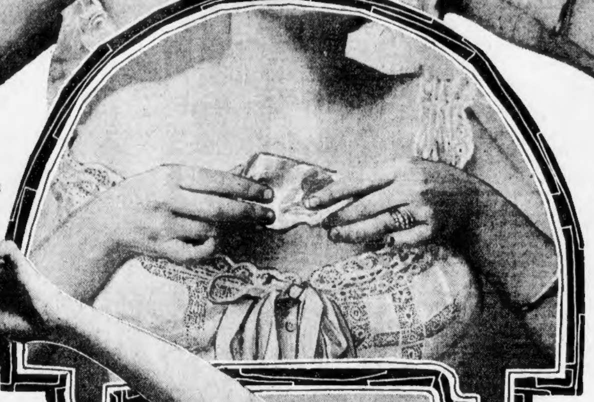
It hardens the muscles of the neck, making the throat white and smooth and firm. This is cause for its adoption by the thin, for a scrawny neck is the accompaniment of slender loveliness.

The newest beauty fad has come to New York from Japan, by way of Paris. French travellers in Japan, noting what all travellers of every nationality have observed, that the Japanese are the best groomed women in the world, having the glossiest hair, the smoothest complexions, the daintiest hands, traced much of this beauty to what the Japanese call their "wonder bath."

The belles of Tokio, having taken their tepid or hot bath, slip on one of their most heavily padded kimonos, creep out into the back yard and plunge into the largest bank of snow, rolling over and over, dog fashion, until their skin tingles with a fine glow. Then they hurry back into their boudoir to examine with delight the natural snow and rose tints of their complexions.

It is an adaptation of this snow bath, which is not practicable in the large American cities of skyscrapers and sandwiched dwellings, which has taken the form of the ice treatment.

It has the double advantage of cheapness and practicability.



RENDERING FIRM AND HARD THE MUSCLES OF THE CHEST.

FREEZING OUT THE "CROW'S FEET."

GETTING RID OF THE "WORRY LINES" BETWEEN THE EYEBROWS

It requires only an extra lump of ice: ve cents' worth is quite enough. But the man must be informed that the piece ice which he furnishes for toilet purses must be smooth. A ragged or jagged ce of ice would defeat the distinct aim purpose of the treatment, which is to the skin smooth and press the muscles .

oreover, it is a direct aid to another ent beauty fad, that of reduction of ht. To each woman her favorite od of lessening her weight. For one walking from five to eight miles Another prefers to reduce by exces- perspiration, and so wears a rubber A third practises the ironing away sh method, and a fourth has foun that the outward application of a reducing ointment is the most effective cure for obesity. But before each woman who has set about reducing her weight ten, fifteen, twenty or thirty pounds stalks the spectre of the aging face.

The cuticle is always of a certain fixed size. It can never be lessened nor enlarged. It is in size as unchangeable in nature as were the laws of the Medes and Persians. In consequence when the substance beneath the skin changes its size there cannot be any corresponding change in the skin. If the facial muscles shrink there is one inevitable result, wrinkles. For the skin having lost the support of the muscles beneath must overlap in a fold or crease. Or strenuous systems of reduction may have the opposite effect of causing the muscles to sag, giving the skin a heavy, bag-like appearance. The effect is of making the face look as though the owner were five or ten years older. So much do women dread this result that they, many of them, keep their faces at the expense of their figures and refuse to reduce their weight. They are terrified by the spectre.

To all women who are reducing the ice is a first aid in the preservation of the beauty of their faces. For its application prevents the first softening that is succeeded by a subsequent shrinking or dropping of the muscles of the face.

"Your face will not grow haggard if you freeze your facial muscles," said the beauty doctors. They advised cloths dipped in cold water and frequently applied.

But the remedy was non-effective. While the cold water failed, the ice succeeded.

A second office performed by this cheap new aid to beauty is that it stimulates the circulation of blood in the skin of the face. The skin of that portion of the body is the most exposed and the least nourished. Whatever promotes the circulation of the blood improves the complexion. The application of ice to the face starts the blood back in haste to the heart, then rebounding from the shock causes it to gush back to the surface with redoubled force. It is this ebb and flow of the tides of blood that nourish the dry skin as the rise and fall of the tide on a shore waters and nourishes that shore.

In one of the Turkish baths of New York the masseuse, after steaming the face of a patron and massaging it thoroughly with cold cream, always passes a smooth lump of ice gently over the face, concentrating the pressure of the ice upon what might be called the wrinkle areas—the temples, the corners of the eye spaces, the space between the eyebrows, where the vertical lines of worry form, and the lines from nose to lips, where intensity of nature writes its easily decipherable records. Over these areas again and again the masseuse presses gently the slowly diminishing lump of ice, smooth, round, and of a size little less than her hand.

Mrs. John Jacob Astor was a pioneer of the ice treatment in this country. She discovered it in France and taught her maid to manipulate it. The prized toilet secret she was too unselfish to keep from her friends. Gradually the members of New York's Colony Club have adopted it, greatly to the improvement of their complexions and as a pleasant incident to the more youthful rounding of their faces.

The ice treatment begins paradoxically with the use of hot water. Some of its disciples prefer tepid water, believing that hot water shrivels and dries the skin.

The face, chin and neck and chest are thoroughly bathed, using the palms of the hands or a square of cheesecloth or silk as the substances least irritating to the delicate skin. Some beauty specialists advise the use of pure soap. Others would eschew soap altogether, using in its stead almond meal.

Wipe the skin of the face, chin, throat and chest perfectly dry, but do this by the dabbing or patting motion, as powder is applied. Never use a strenuous up-and-down motion of the towel, as this loosens the skin from the muscles beneath and makes it more susceptible to wrinkles.

Next apply a pure cold cream, preferably one made of purely vegetable substances, since the use of animal substances causes the hair to grow upon the face. Massage the cream, or, if preferred, a toilet oil, as coconut oil, well into the skin, using a gentle upward pressure for the face, a downward stroke for the neck, and a rotary one for the chest. With a fresh square of soft silk or cheesecloth wipe away what remains of the cold cream.

The fourth step is to saturate still another cloth, or, if preferred, a silk sponge, in cool water and pass this quickly over face and neck and chin.

The fifth step of the ice treatment consists in using the ice proper. With a smooth piece of ice about the size of the hand use a slow rotary motion on the trouble lines between the brows. A half dozen movements are enough for the first experiments. The experienced may increase the number to twelve.

Then address the treatment to the troublesome crow's feet at the corner of the eyes. Again use the rotary motion from a half dozen to a dozen times.

The deep lines of emotion, drawn from the nose to a quarter or half-inch below the lips, must be ironed outward with a stroke toward the ears. These muscles will endure a long and vigorous treatment, say for five minutes, on either side of the face.

Apply the ice, this time holding it with the tips of the fingers, to the chin. Stroke with an alternate movement of the fingers of either hand from right to left and the reverse. Not only is this believed to be an ultimate cure for double chin, but it is as well an excellent preventive.

So treat the neck behind the ears with the now diminished lump of ice, using a rotary motion behind the ears. The same movement should be used on the chest.

Immediateley after give the skin a second coat of cream wherever the ice has been applied, to prevent cracking and chafing under the severe treatment.

REMOVING THE FIRST FAINT LINES FROM THE CHEST.

Why Jack Sprat Was Wrong Not to Eat Fat.

"JACK SPRAT could eat no fat," says the nursery rhyme. A great many people have a prejudice against the fat of meats, and a recent issue of the London Lancet—perhaps the most important medical journal published—shows why they are wrong.

Many minor ills of the body would be avoided if only care were taken to include a sufficiency of fat in the diet. Fat, we know, is about the most compact form of fuel which we possess, while it exercises a favorable effect upon the processes of the intestinal tract.

In excessively cold countries a rich fatty diet is indispensable, for fat is the only food substance which will rapidly replace the heat lost by the body, and travelers in the Arctic regions have related that they could only be kept warm and comfortable by a generous supply of fatty food, in comparison with which the effect of extra clothing was inappreciable.

The tendency of to-day in many quarters is to exclude as much as possible the fatty portions of animal foods. Pieces of fat are carefully cut off the slice of ham, mutton, or beef, and only the lean parts are eaten. Indeed, for some unaccountable reason the eating of fat is regarded by not a few as positively vulgar.

Such an attitude, of course, displays an ignorance of physiological facts. Cold feet, hands, fingers, ears and chilblains would in many instances be avoided under a generous diet of fatty food. A digestible fat favors nutrition considerably; it spares much waste of the tissue-forming elements of food.

When lean meat alone is given large quantities are required in order that nutrition and waste may balance one another, but if fat be added the demand for flesh is less. Besides, therefore, giving an advantage in regard to making good the repair of the body, the use of it is economical from the point of view of dollars and cents.

The absorption of large quantities of fatless meat again tends to overload the blood with nitrogenous waste products. In anaemic persons the partaking of an easily digested fat is commonly followed by the best results, nutrition is greatly improved, and the condition of the blood is often restored to normal. It is well known, again, that easily absorbable fats, such as butter, cream, cod liver oil, bacon fat and dripping, are especially valuable to sufferers from wasting diseases.

The introduction of the old-fashioned and well-prepared suet pudding into the diet is in perfect accordance with scientific teaching, and from the dietetic point of view, especially in the feeding of young growing people, does probably a really beneficial service to the country.

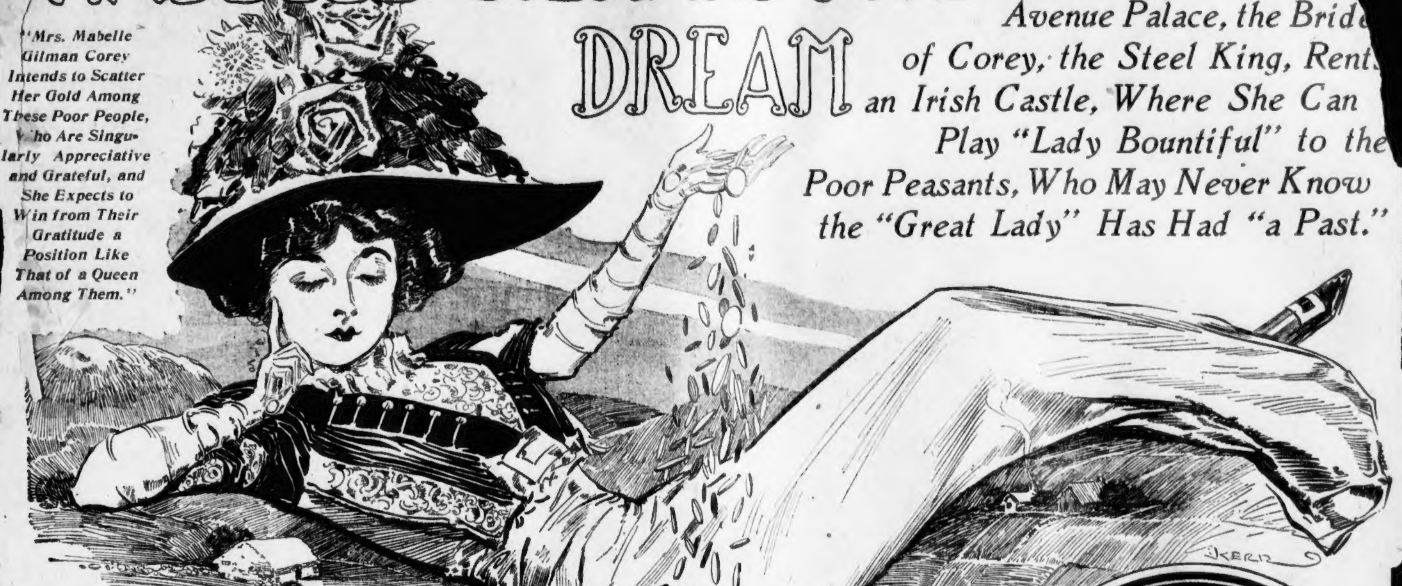
MABELLE GILMAN'S FOND DREAM

Lonesome and Disappointed in Her Fi Avenue Palace, the Brid of Corey, the Steel King, Rent an Irish Castle, Where She Can Play "Lady Bountiful" to the Poor Peasants, Who May Never Know the "Great Lady" Has Had "a Past."

"Mrs. Mabelle Gilman Corey Intends to Scatter Her Gold Among These Poor People, Who Are Singularly Appreciative and Grateful, and She Expects to Win from Their Gratitude a Position Like That of a Queen Among Them."



WHEN Mabelle Gilman took Corey, the Steel Trust multi-millionaire, away from his wife, she reasoned that she had won fortune and position. With unlimited money would not all the desires of her heart be fulfilled? Surely; and with a palace in the very centre of Fifth avenue she would be in the whirl of fashionable life.

But things have not turned out that way. From her drawing-room windows Mrs. Corey looks down eagerly on the passing panorama of New York life. The carriages and automobiles of the Great Ladies of the Smart Set never pause at her door. There is no place for her at the functions of "the 400;" no possible hope of social position.

Mrs. Corey occupies a house at No. 803 Fifth avenue, which is in the very heart of what is known as Millionaires' Row. All around about her are Astors, Vanderbilts, Goulds and others who are not only rich, but at the top of fashionable society. She sees them every day but they do not bow or speak to the former queen of the light opera stage, who separated a man from his faithful wife.

The Steel King and his present wife have no society worth speaking of. His family have been estranged by their marriage. Her family have been driven away because they are too vulgar for Millionaires' Row. Painful to state, Mrs. Corey's sister, Ruth, is married to "the Champion Heavyweight Barker of the Middle West," and other family alliances are not more brilliant.

Mrs. Corey has become disgusted by the lack of a distinguished social milieu. What is the use of winning a greater triumph than any woman of the stage; of marrying a leader of the business world; of having the finest automobiles in New York; of having pearls and diamonds that are among the finest in the country, if you still remain socially a nobody?

She determined to put an end to this state of affairs at any cost and she has hit upon a most peculiar way of doing it. She has taken an estate in a lonely part of the West of Ireland, where she will play Lady Bountiful and be the only person of any importance in a territory of hundreds of square miles, inhabited by a half-starved peasantry.

The place taken by William Ellis Corey for his wife is Dalgan Park Castle, Shrule, near Tuam, County Galway. He has taken it on a fifty-year lease, from its owner, Lord de Clifford, paying $50,000 down and a yearly rental of $2,500 for it.

Lord de Clifford, who owns the place, is a very youthful nobleman who married Miss Eva Carrington of the Gaiety Theatre, London, when he was only twenty-one years old. Since then he and his wife have had rather hard work to make both ends meet and live in a manner becoming his rank and foolishness. The lease of the Irish estate to the Coreys will be a very welcome assistance to them. Lord de Clifford belongs to a very ancient family, being the twenty-fifth baron of his line. Like many other old English families they have large estates in Ireland.

The castle is about 200 years old and is very picturesque. An estate of 1,000 acres surrounds it. It is situated near the shores of Lough Corrib, one of the largest and most beautiful lakes in the west of Ireland.

Galway is a typical West of Ireland county, and in the West the poverty is greater than any other part of the country, which, of course is, in a general way, the most distressed in the world. The scenery is very beautiful. There are stretches of inconceivably green grass and beautiful woods and hills almost rising to mountains in the background. But the soil is very poor, the peasantry cannot live on even the richest kind of grass, and they have to eke out a miserable existence on a few potatoes. When the potato crop falls a trifle below the average they starve.

Many of these poor peasants live in huts made entirely of turf, without windows. The floor is of mud and often soft from water and other causes. The pig, if the family is fortunate enough to possess one, lives indoors with his owners, and usually occupies the centre of the floor. But comparatively few families in Galway are prosperous enough to own a pig.

These huts are frequently inferior to those of savages, but they are the abode of [illegible] Christian people. Often the inmates have no artificial means of warming themselves. Peat is the only economical substitute for coal, and that is useless unless carefully dried. Works have now been started for drying and compressing peat into a form which is practically coal, but this article will be beyond the reach of the poor Galway peasants.

The poor peasants are not safe in the possession of their miserable huts, for if the landlord can find a wretch who can pay a penny a week more rent he evicts his tenant and thrusts him out with his family into the cold and rain, even though it be in the depth of Winter. Men are found in this country willing to work for eighteen cents a day, and sometimes they cannot even get that.

Mrs. Mabelle Gilman Corey intends to scatter her gold among these poor people, who are singularly appreciative and grateful and she expects to win from their gratitude a position like that of a queen among them.

When she drives abroad in her carriage or auto she will enjoy the homage of an admiring populace, instead of the cold disregard of her neighbors which is her fate in New York.

They will not inquire into her past or trouble their minds as to whether her husband is a divorced man or not. The fact that she could not get into New York society would not bother them, even if they knew it. They will lift their caps to her enthusiastically and bow the knee and greet her as a gracious lady sent by Heaven to rule over them and distribute blessings among them.

They will express appreciation with racy Irish humor of her good looks and also of her fine voice, if they happen to hear it.

She will be asked to give the prizes to the school children at the local village school at Shrule and will be treated with the same honors as if she were a royal princess. At all sorts of local affairs of this kind she will have an opportunity to play the gracious patroness.

The few persons of the nobility, gentry and landlord class who remain in the country, will be delighted to know Mrs. Corey and be received in her castle, for they will welcome the accession of a person of such wealth to a neighborhood that is sadly in need of money. Among them are many persons of impressively aristocratic descent, tracing their ancestry directly back to the ancient Kings of Ireland and especially to the royal family of Connaught, the province in which Galway is situated.

In this humble, poverty-stricken and yet attractive country Mrs. Mabelle Gilman Corey will be able to live in an atmosphere of flattery and adulation instead of one of contempt and ostracism, which has been her lot in America for several years.

The salmon fishing on the estate is the finest in the United Kingdom, and the shooting is good. These will provide Mr. Corey with amusement.

Mrs. Corey's new and strange expedition in search of social distinction and consolation is the latest act in one of the most curious domestic dramas that has ever been unfolded before the American public.

Once upon a time William Ellis Corey was a model American citizen. After working in a coal mine he rose step by step until he occupied a foremost position in the Pittsburg steel industry. During his years of struggle he was helped and comforted by his faithful wife, whom he had married in early youth. She was Miss Laura Cook.

At last Corey's business career reached a climax when he was appointed president of the United States Steel Trust with the largest salary in the world. Wise persons and instructors of youth pointed him out as a shining example of how a man could rise to the highest position by his own unaided industry.

No sooner had he reached this lofty position, however, than he shocked the community by his devotion to Miss Mabelle Gilman, the brilliant star of "The Mocking Bird" and other light operas. The humble, toil-worn wife of his youth, the mother of his children, was no longer good enough for him when he had attained wealth and celebrity. He needed something younger and showier.

With calm brutality he told his wife that he wished to separate from her, and she, realizing that it was useless to hold a man against his will, agreed to obtain a divorce. It is said that she received $1,000,000 alimony. At the trial Corey's own sister testified that he was not a fit person to take care of his son. In fact, she thought that no New York man was a proper guardian of youth. All Corey's family sided strongly against him and took the part of his discarded wife. His father was particularly severe upon him.

"Mrs. Corey was the best wife that ever blessed a man's life," said old Mr. Corey. "When my son was a poor man working for $40 a month his wife was as devoted as a woman could be."

Then Mr. Corey bought for Miss "Mocking Bird" Gilman the Chateau de Villegenis, the finest chateau in the vicinity of Par and formerly in the possession of the partes. After she had enjoyed regal state here for a season sh to New York, and Mr. Corey s business associates more than ev rying her.

Then came the desperate ass York society, which, as w failed utterly. Probably Mrs been more unhappy in her palace than she had been at she made her first success

Now she is going to po way, where she hopes that the poverty of the people great personage.

The Chances for Working Girls to Get Husbands.

BREAD-WINNING girls may be divided into nine classes with respect to their chance to get husbands. These are nurses, stenographers, servants, shopgirls, factory girls, school teachers, telephone operators, dressmakers and stay-at-home girls, says a statistician, with whose conclusions, however, you may not agree.

For chances to marry, the trained nurse heads the list. It is a standing joke among authors to have the young man go to war and distinguish himself as a hero. He is seriously wounded and taken to a hospital. After weeks of lingering illness he regains consciousness. He dreams that an angel is ministering to him, and opens his eyes. There, at his side, a red cross on her arm, is a trained nurse, the girl with whom he had a trifling quarrel before he marched off. The close of the romance is plain.

There is an indefinable charm about the nurse that cannot be gainsaid. She is dressed neatly, with her little white cap and starched apron. She treads softly and her touch is gentle. To a man just coming out of a siege of fever, when he has to lie for days at a time merely gaining his strength, the coming of the nurse to smooth the pillow is something to be looked forward to for hours.

Second on the list is the stenographer. The stenographer is a girl of some education, refinement and culture. Her dress is neat, she has easy hours, and she holds her age well. In the average office she sees and comes to know many men a week. The employer himself often falls in love with her.

The servant comes third on the list. There is an old, old saying that the way to a man's heart is through his stomach. This is verified every day by the number of cooks who tell their employer that they are going to be mistress of a private table for two. Like the nurse, the servant has the additional charm of a neat costume.

The salesgirl comes next. She meets a reasonable number of marriageable men. She has many chances to pick up a certain degree of culture. By watching women of refinement, their grammar, pronunciation and mannerisms, she is the gainer. Just these little things put her in a class above girls who seldom come in contact with persons of better education.

The factory girl comes next, and as a hard worker, she is seized upon by the single young artisan.

Strange as it may seem, the school-teacher comes sixth in the list of nine. She has many comforts and privileges that are denied other working girls. She has a better education, has shorter hours, can improve herself in general reading and in culture. She has more time to devote to her dress. She can hold her age better, travel more, but with all that she has fewer opportunities for marriage than many another girl.

The telephone girl has not the easy sailing that she is often said to have. She, too, is separated from the men, few of whom she ever meets face to face. When the telephone was new there was an additional charm to the girl who sent her voice over hundreds of miles, but since they are so common all the romance has gone.

There is only one small chance, and that is with the class of men who fall in love with a voice.

Find Five Minutes a Day for the Care of Your Finge

MANY a busy working girl, while she is desirous of caring for her nails, is unable to devote much time to this all-important function, and may like to know a simple method which would occupy only a few minutes daily.

Any one will find the following method simple to understand, and requiring a few minutes only to perform, and although, of course, you cannot expect to obtain the same results as when your nails are submitted to a professional manicurist, yet after a few weeks you need never be ashamed of them again. Soak the fingers in warm, soapy water, so as to soften the nails and the surrounding cuticle. Then dry them on a soft towel, and, taking an orange wood stick, deftly insert this under the nails to extract any colored m er. Next trim the nail with a pair of ed scissors, and then, with the rough s f the file or emery board sold for th r-pose, finally bevelling it with th er side.

Now for the cuticle; this m

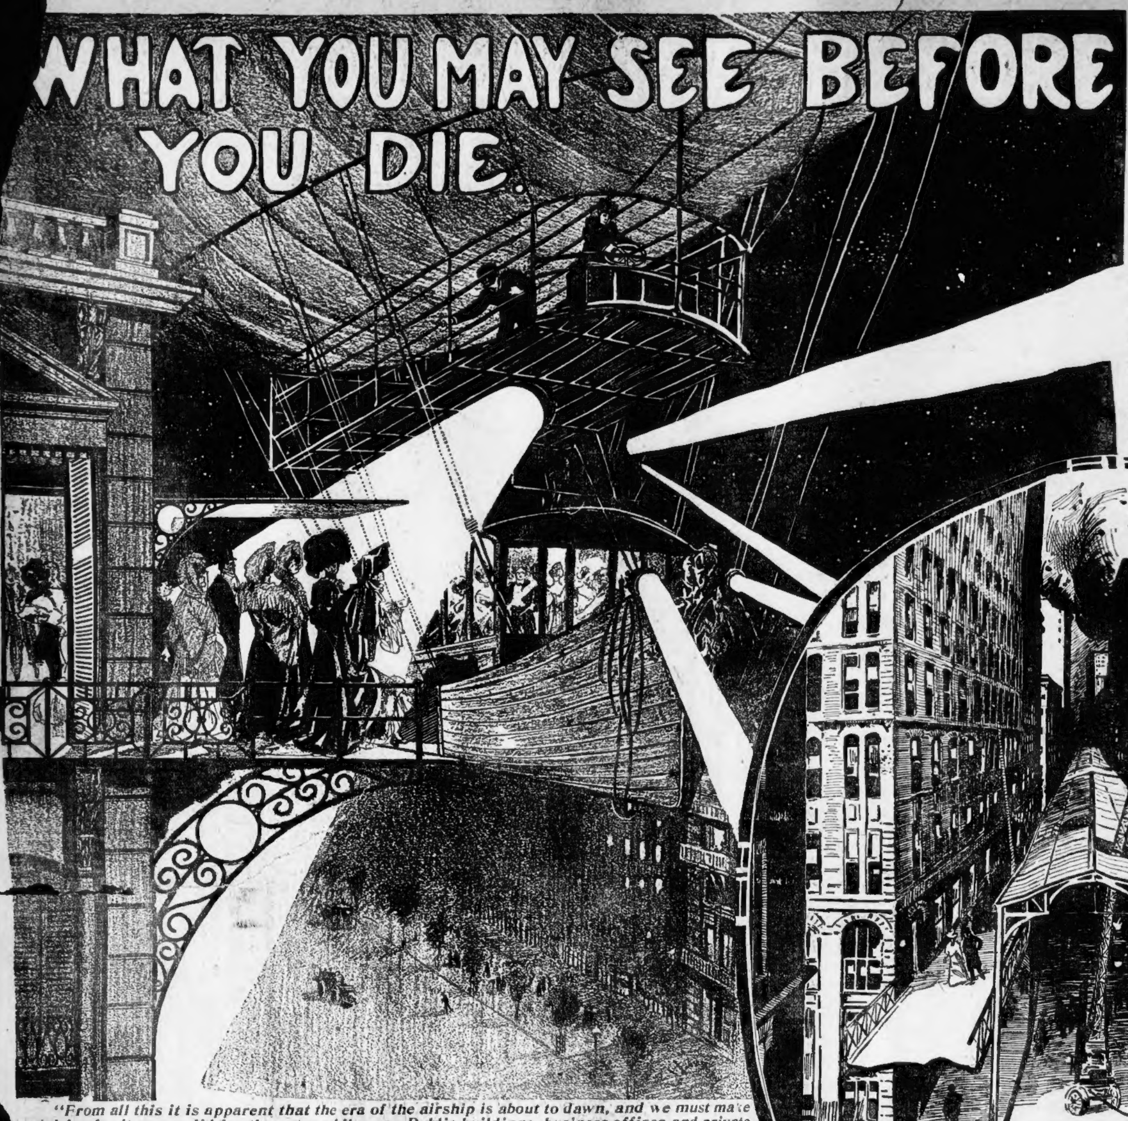
WHAT YOU MAY SEE BEFORE YOU DIE.



"From all this it is apparent that the era of the airship is about to dawn, and we must make provision for it as we did for the automobile era. Public buildings, business offices and private residences must be equipped with airship landing stations, and within the lifetime of this generation, we shall see lines of airships anchored above the streets, just as we now see long lines of cabs and automobiles standing at the curb in the streets below."

New York City in the Near Future.

IN 1883 land was worth $100 a square foot in lower New York; to-day land has been sold for $500 a foot—at the rate of $22,000,000 an acre. This rate of increase will make land worth almost incredible figures in another twenty-five years, and every possible device to gain room and make use of the precious land in lower New York will be adopted.

Population is growing about as rapidly as land values are increasing. There were 2,200,000 people in Greater New York in 1883. To-day there are 4,250,000. At this rate of growth, and counting upon other factors of progress, New York will be a city of 10,500,000 in another quarter of a century.

This is the estimate of Messrs. Caccavajo, Pruyn & Calhoun, consulting engineers for the Joint Subway Committee of Greater New York.

These startling facts and figures have caused the Committee on Congestion of Population of New York City to set to work artists, statisticians and architects to devise ways of housing and transporting the vast population of the near future, and meeting other problems that will arise.

So urgent is the need for bringing about improvements to keep pace with New York's growing population that many of the most prominent men and women the city banded together for this purpose to p- the Committee on Congestion of Population. m are Mr. R. Fulton Cutting, of the New lation for Improving the Condition of the rd Bradstreet, of the Metropolitan Parks Dr. H. C. One of the most phenom- in the increase of the as sed n which great buildin ve ience showed perfectly ly is adopted of controlli d and business constructi well as tenement construction, entirely different from the degree of control hitherto exercised by the Government, New York will have most astounding and hopeless congestion. No city has better illustrated the breakdown complete and natural of the haphazard system."

To bring about a concerted organized movement, to make far reaching plans for the future and to carry them out under municipal direction, is the object of this new aggressive association, of which Mr. Marsh is the executive secretary.

The recent exhibit of the Congestion of Population Committee, held at the Museum of Natural History, illustrated this future growth, progress and the new improvements which are planned to be undertaken in the near future.

Very impressive to the eye and the imagination are the drawings of Charles R. Lamb, the distinguished artist and decorator.

He foresees that the greatest innovations in the immediate future will not be merely the height of skyscrapers. Buildings of twenty to thirty stories have ceased to excite any wonder, and even the new Singer Building of forty-one stories has not aroused anything like the wonderment that the Park Row and St. Paul buildings did a few years ago, with their twenty-six and twenty-nine stories.

The things that will change the looks of the city most from now on, Artist Lamb believes, will be ar-

I CONSIDER that the conquest of the air is now an accomplished fact. It is a simple matter to construct airships which can travel at the rate of thirty miles an hour, carry from six to eight passengers and remain in the air from ten to twelve hours.

All this is the development of the last few years, and looking ahead five years from now every great nation will possess light squadrons of airships attached to their armies and navies. And while this progress is being made in military dirigibles, still greater progress will be made in commercial and pleasure airships.

At the present moment Mr. Farman, the winner of the $10,000 aeroplane prize, is building flying machines to order. He has established a London agency in Piccadilly, and it is now possible to order an airship much in the same way as one would order an automobile, at the cost of about $6,000.

Many of these changes will doubtless be seen by a great many of the middle-aged residents of to-day, while most of the younger generation of the present can hopefully look forward to seeing New York at the 1933 period, when all the improvements pictured herewith will doubtless have been accomplished, and prob-

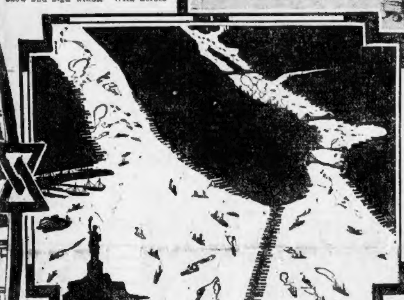
Horses and heavy trucking would be excluded, except at certain hours before and after the day's rush.

The sidewalks and curbing would be abolished. The whole street would be a walk or corridor. Certain European cities, like Vienna, have no sidewalks in their narrow streets; the whole thoroughfares become mainly foot passageways.

Nassau street, being glassed over, would be protected from rain and snow and high winds. With horses and street traffic shut out, except at certain hours, it could be kept as neat and clean as a corridor.



The elevated sidewalks would still further relieve the crowds on the streets at rush hours. This would enable the store space to be doubled. Every second-story room would naturally be turned into a retail shop.

If these sidewalks were extended to the neighboring Brooklyn Bridge, people coming in from their offices in the tall buildings and going to the ridge, subway or elevated road, would ot have to descend into the hubbub nd turmoil of the main streets at all. verybody knows what a terrific crush nd perilous jam and helter-skelter his downtown district now is between and 6 o'clock in the afternoon.

A person might make a tour of the whole financial district without ever going out from under a roof. The sunlight and air would be admitted, but all the inclemencies of weather and the dirt of street traffic would be as effectively shut out as if it were all one continuous office building.

The irregularity in the height of buildings would be evened up by having glass walls extend down from the glazed roof to the tops of the lower buildings.

All this expense of arcading the streets, it is expected, the city would pay for, just as it now does for paving the streets.

This new scheme for roofing over the downtown streets would call for the removal of the horse almost of necessity to preserve cleanliness. Automobiles and motor trucks would naturally have to be admitted at certain hours.

Artist Lamb and his colleagues on the Committee on Congestion of Population believe that this arcading of streets will have to begin long before 1933—in fact, in the very near future.

Another innovation which they point out as highly desirable, and which naturally must come in the not distant future, is an elevated boulevard all round the city along the docks. The city owns the water front and could easily construct such a highway. Moreover, the city could easily compel every steamship company which leases a dock to make a flat roof over their docks, with proper railings, so that every dock would be a recreation pier and pleasure ground.

But the natural water front area of New York is not by any means enough to accommodate the shipping. Years ago even the passenger steamship lines began to be crowded off over to Brooklyn and New Jersey. To provide greater dock area, especially for passenger vessels, it is proposed to build a long pier at the Battery which will reach several miles out into the Bay, with docks on each side.

This pier may be extended clear to Staten Island. Thist would serve the additional purpose of providing rapid transit for the Borough of Richmond and bringing it into close touch with Manhattan.

To provide more freight docks for the growing shipping of this port, it is proposed to build acres and acres of docks in the lower bay. These could be made on piling and afterward filled in with ashes, dirt and refuse brought down from the city in scows. Railroad tracks could be run to these docks from the Jersey shore, on long trestles.

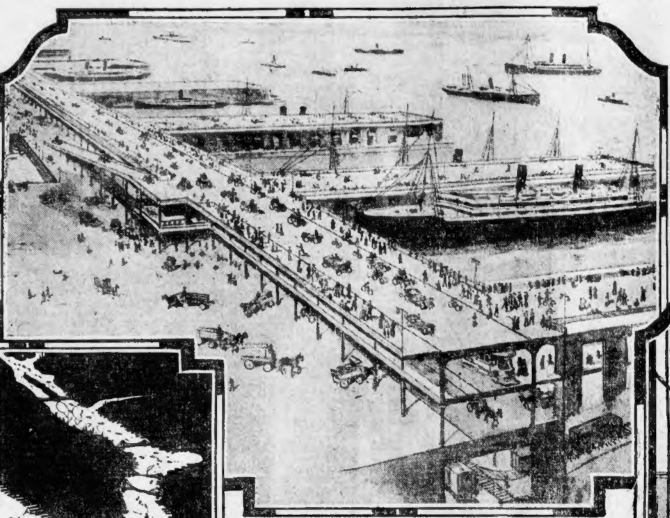
Still another great improvement which the Committee on Congestion of Population foresees is the co-operative kitchen for each block. Artist Lamb has worked this out in a detailed sketch, so that it would not be difficult for any architect to make plans and specifications for building such a kitchen.

In any residence block there are at least fifty families, all struggling with the problem of getting and keeping a good chef and kitchen assistants. If there were a central co-operative kitchen one such chef or chief cook would answer the purpose. He could hire what assistants were necessary, and relieve all the fifty or more mistresses of households of the cares about the kitchen. Hot meals could be served at any of the houses in the block at all hours. The serving of the meals could be superintended by one butler. This would be another great convenience and saving of expense. It would only be necessary for each household to keep one or more parlor and chamber maids.

St., N. Y., to take care of s and perilously dodge to and from the slips.

In parts of the city where there are not only many residences, but apartment houses, also, the economy and convenience would be still greater. There might be from 100 to 500 families, all served from the central co-operative kitchen. Each householder could telephone her order in the morning for just the kind of meals she wished served in her apartment that day, and at what hours. Then she could go out shopping, walking or driving, to club meetings or what not, and have no more anxiety about the family meals than her husband when he goes into a restaurant for his noon lunch. She knows everything will be served just as ordered.

In the poorer districts, where the residents could not afford to hire a chef, butler and assistants, the co-operative kitchen might still be practicable. A cook and waiter could be hired, and all the rest of the service be given voluntarily by some members of each household. This would be a saving over the present methods of buying meats and provisions in small quantities and at high prices for each family. Moreover, as kitchens in each flat would be done away with, there would be just so much more room left for the family to live in, and all the disagreeable kitchen odors which permeate small apartments, would be eliminated.



"To provide greater dock area, especially for passenger vessels, it is proposed to build a long pier at the Battery which will reach several miles out into N. Y. Bay with docks on each side."

Another innovation which the Committee of Thoroughfares contemplates is the making of interior pedestrian streets in the middle of long blocks between avenues. Unsightly back yards, now filled with filth and rubbish, would be cleaned out—walls and fences would be removed, and a smooth and comparatively straight walk made from one end of the block to the other. This would not only be a convenient walk for adults, avoiding the bustle and noise of the streets, in going to and from their homes, but it would be a safe playground for the children of the block, so that they need never go out into the street.

In connection with the co-operative kitchen, a laundry might easily be established, and this would do away with all the vile odors of steam and soapsuds in the apartments, and also the unsightly clothes lines behind each flat.

The Committee on Thoroughfares has in view the making of broad approaches to the Brooklyn Bridge and other bridges, so that the terrible crowd and crush at the New York ends of the big bridges shall be done away with. Instead, passengers and vehicles will enter upon a series of curved inclines, affording plenty of room for all, and making handsome approaches to the bridges.

Mr. Lamb, formerly on the Thoroughfares Committee, also proposes to remedy the chaotic conditions at the Circle, at the junction of Eighth avenue and Fifty-ninth street. He would have all the cars coming in from four directions go round the outside on a circular track. At points along the circle would be isles of safety, raised platforms, railed in, where passengers could alight and transfer from one car to another. Teams and automobiles would have to keep on the extreme outer edge of the circle.

The inner circle would be reserved for pedestrians, and in the middle of the space would be a lofty column and a circular colonnade. Mr. Lamb thinks this would be a public monument more in keeping with the Circle and the high buildings growing up in that vicinity than the present rather insignificant Columbus statue.

The colonnade would also be a public shelter and resting place. The circle might also be used as a place for open-air meetings or reviewing of processions. The roof of the circular colonnade could be used as a rostrum for public speakers and for a reviewing stand.

The necessity for these changes and improvements is shown by the statistics compiled by Caccavajo, Pruyn & Calhoun, consulting engineers. The population of the territory now embraced in Greater New York in 1850 was 696,115. In 1860 it was 1,174,779; in 1870, 1,478,103; in 1880, 1,911,698; in 1890, 2,507,414; in 1900, 3,437,202. At the present time it is about 4,250,000.

Basing a computation on the past rate of growth, it is figured that in 1910 the population of Greater New York will be 4,800,000. By 1920 it will have leaped to 7,000,000, and will then probably have outstripped London and become the largest city in the world. In 1930 it will have reached 9,800,000, in 1933, just twenty-five years from now, there will be 10,500,000; in 1940, 13,700,000, and in 1950 there will be 19,250,000, or nearly 20,000,000.

These figures, the consulting engineers say, are very conservative, and are based upon the percentage of increase during the last fifty years. They do not take into account the subways, river tunnels and other factors of progress, whose influence is now beginning to be felt. These agencies, it is believed, will increase the rate of growth so that New York will have a population of 25,000,000 in 1950.

Even then, it is thought, the Borough of Queens, on Long Island, will still have plenty of room, and Richmond, with its large available acreage, should have ten times the 250,000 population predicted for it in the statistics.

Estimates by statisticians indicate that the density of population in the outlying boroughs will eventually exceed that of Manhattan Island, which is at present the most thickly inhabited part of the city.

After 1933 Manhattan will show a decrease in residential population, as most of the island will be devoted to business buildings. Its population will then be 2,000,000, while Brooklyn will have 7,000,000 and the Bronx 4,000,000 and Queens 6,000,000. But the Bronx will then have the greatest density of population of any part of the city.

By 1933 the average population in Manhattan, per acre, will be from three to five times what it is at present in residential territory.

At the present time the average value of land, per acre, in Manhattan, is $193,247, in the Bronx it is $8,304, in Brooklyn $9,781, in Queens $1,491, and in Richmond $696.

The Committee on Congestion of Population has been making a study of the distribution of factories in New York, particularly in Manhattan and the Bonx. They discovered the significant fact that out of 19,553 factories and 481,856 workers, over 3,000 factories and nearly 325,000 workers were in 1906 located below Fourteenth street, roughly taking the Assembly District lines, in about twenty per cent of the area of the city.

Even more remarkable is the further denseness of the factories in the Sixth Assembly District, bounded by East Fourth street, Third avenue St. Marks place, Second avenue, Second street, First avenue, Houston, Eldridge, Stanton, Chrystie and Division streets, Bowery, Canal street, Broadway. In this little area of eighty-six acres, 1 3-10 per cent of the total area of Manhattan are massed 12 per cent of the factories and 11 7-10 per cent of the workers.

Going still further into building congestion of factories, the committee discovered that in a single block in lower Manhatan, bounded by Prince, Crosby, Broadway and East Houston streets, a block with an area of only 3 3-10 acres, there are 4,007 workers and 77 factories, a density of 1,210 workers to the acre and 23 factories. This block will be presented at the Exhibit by a model. About 60 per cent of the buildings are twelve stories in height. Ninety-seven percent of the area of the site is covered, and the land is worth more than a million dollars an acre.

There are nearly forty blocks with a density of 1,000 or over to the acre, the greatest density reaching 1,607 to the acre. Even more striking is the fact that this congestion is spreading throughout the city not in one section only, but the Bronx, which was supposed to be reserved as a city of homes, is [illegible] ting up in all sections of the Twenty-third Ward five and six story tenements.

When it is remembered that in 1901 London had only 4,903 acres with a density of between 150 and 200 people to the acre as against the average of nearly 150 to the acre in 1905 for the whole island of Manhattan, the comparative freedom of London from congestion of population is apparent, as compared with conditions in this New World city.

To meet the transportation problem presented by growing millions, Engineer Caccavajo calculates that by 1933 it will be necessary to build eight more subways in Manhattan, one running under every main avenue, north and south, six in the Bronx, five in Queens and nine in Brooklyn.

Mr. Caccavajo is now working on a plan by which he hopes to show how subways can be built at about one-half the present cost. If this proves practical it will doubtless make far more rapid the subway construction in Greater New York till the city will be completely honeycombed by these modern catacombs. Indeed, underground New York bids fair, in the future, to be an even greater marvel than the city above the surface.

Even with all this subterranean transit it seems doubtful whether the needs of future New York's ten millions will be properly provided for.

In the past such urgent need for some new device has usually brought about inventions that solved perplexing problems. So it is believed by many thoughtful people now that some practical kind of air ship will be discovered for moving the great population in New York and other cities.

If this be so, the wonderful sights which will be presented by New York twenty-five years hence would seem to be impossible to exaggerate.

How the streets along Lower Broadway, New York, will be arcaded, making all the financial district practically one vast office building, all under a glass roof.

HOW THE CITY WILL CHANGE

By Benjamin C. Marsh.

Executive Secretary of the Committee on Congestion of Population of New York.

IF the Subway, the tunnels under the rivers and the gigantic Singer Building would have astonished those of the last generation, it is quite as certain that the changes and improvements which must certainly take place in New York in the near future will be quite as radical and surprising to the present generation.

Twenty-five years from now New York will present the magnificent spectacle of a city of ten and a half millions of people, with airships for rapid transit; beneath the surface it will be honeycombed with modern subway catacombs, and all lower New York will practically be made into one vast office building by glass-covered, arcaded streets, according to the plans exhibited recently by the Municipal Art Society at the American Museum of Natural History.

The effort to foresee the development of New York City, if it follows the go-as-you-please principle, is largely speculation. The interests concerned with the erection of enormously high office and other buildings will still be permitted to erect buildings to such height as to be a menace not merely to the occupants but to all who must use the streets on which they lie.

The city or State has a duty, as imperative as it has hitherto been neglected, to insure a higher standard of living, more privacy, more space, and better opportunity to resist the attacks of disease and to prevent exploitation of the poor and ignorant by methods it has never hitherto conceived. Town planning is essentially the community setting itself the task of controlling the conditions of community development so that each citizen may have a normal chance for development, which is now all too frequently denied.

"Mary Jane" In Real Life

PHOTO BY

Mary Jane Outcault by herself

By R. F. OUTCAULT.

OF COURSE everybody knows Mary Jane, because she is Buster Brown's constant companion, but very few people know the real Mary Jane in private life. And there is such a little lady—yes, very decidedly. Her name in full is just Mary Jane Outcault, and she lives, when she is at home, at Flushing, L. I. But she is not always at home; indeed, she is quite a globe trotter.

Every little girl in the land knows the hair ribbon that she has made famous, and most any little girl would be proud to own as large a collection of such ribbons. Many a poor little girl has been made happy by the gift of one or more of these bow-knots, for Mary Jane is a very generous girl. One of the reasons Buster and Tige love her is on account of her generosity. But another reason—and it is so with all the men—is that she wears such pretty and "stylish" frocks.

And why shouldn't she wear lovely frocks? She is so much on the go and is so very well known that she must always be exquisitely gowned. Well known?—why shouldn't she be well known? Is not her portrait on lithographs all over the land, proclaiming the fact that Buster Brown is coming? And there are four companies playing this dramatization of Buster's pranks. Every child who has seen the play knows that Mary Jane is one of the principal characters, and four clever little actresses have been engaged to play this imitation of her.

Millions of children see her picture in the Sunday comic supplements of this newspaper, and her name and picture have been trade-marked, copyrighted and registered. But does she grow proud or become set-up over herself? Not in the least, for she has been used to notoriety since she has been a baby. During her recent tour of the West she has received hundreds of letters from little boys and girls who have seen her photographs in the papers, and she has spent many hours in answering these letters.

Innumerable presents have been received by her from admiring friends and strangrs. Some of the gifts have been very odd ones; for instance, an inmate in a Western prison who had been made happy once a week by the comic supplement sent her a beautiful belt made of horsehair, with a silver clasp, all his own work, with a letter telling of his admiration. One Western millionaire sent a gorgeous doll on Christmas to her hotel, thanking her for the pleasure she had given his little girls. A rich Californian presented her with a ring made of gold from his mine and containing two beautiful diamonds, while another miner presented her with a cross and chain from his mine.

So many dolls did Mary Jane receive that a special trunk had to be bought to carry the collection, which also included a stuffed effigy of Tige, a large stuffed monkey and two Teddy Bears. They did not receive the attention from her that they deserved, however, for she was so busily engaged in answering the scores of letters that daily came to her. And in one of the largest and best-known restaurants in Denver her picture adorns the wall above one of the tables, that is known as the Mary Jane table.

What an interesting lot of experiences she has had for one little girl! and it has made her very happy to know there are so many kind and loving people in the world. Mary Jane is a champion of animals. A driver with a whip excites her indignation; a homeless dog or cat always excites her pity and always receives a caress from her. Among the many letters she receives are frequent appeals for aid, and most of these have been granted. Should she not be happy? Has she not had Buster and Tige for friends? The birds sing, the flowers bloom, the sun shines, and do these things not make her happy? She has two dogs and three cats, and until recently she possessed a horse, with the distinguished name of Beaconsfield, which she presented to Mr. Albert Bigelow Paine.

Although this little lady has been much abroad and has seen most of the interesting sights of Europe, she prefers her own country. The painted desert of Arizona and New Mexico, the mountains of Colorado and the orange country of California are more fascinating than the snow-clad Alps or the historic Rhine.

Mary Jane feels keenly the responsibility of being Buster's side partner and playmate. She realizes that Buster is constantly in need of new pranks, else his vocation would be gone. She knows that it is necessary for something funny to happen, and things do happen; sometimes only in her imagination, but they must happen. There are those, perhaps, who imagine that Buster's history is purely and wholly fiction, but Mary Jane can tell them better. Many of the odd experiences portrayed in the pictures have been the plain fabric of truth unembellished by the flounces of imagination. For instance, when Mrs. Brown buys an electric flatiron to use in hotels when on a tour in the West, and appoints Buster and Mary Jane as a committee of two to attach it and put it in working order, one doesn't have to use much imagination in order to divine what is going to happen. Mary Jane realizes the possibilities in every situation, so when she and her Buster brother are flying along in their automobile on a Long Island road, and see some pretty little baby pigs, and proceed to purchase one from the farmer, she knows before she reaches home that a pig in an automobile is a silly situation.

Naturally, this little lady would be thus inclined, because she has been reared in an atmosphere where people create. The poet, the composer, the author and playwright are constantly her companions, and so her imagination has taken a practical turn. Humor is a commodity in her home. And Tige, well, he seems to know what it all means; dogs always do.

Are dogs humorous? Of course they are. They are worth studying and knowing, but they are democratic. You can't win a dog's acquaintance or friendship with a letter of introduction or a ton of credentials. You must like him and he'll like you. Mary Jane knows this. She caresses every dog and horse she meets, and none has ever failed to respond and look longingly after her as she disappears up the street. She has found that in all countries animals speak the same tongue.

If poor Mary Jane's mail increases as it has done during the last few months, she feels that some of the letters will have to go unanswered, as it will require more time than she will really be able to conscientiously give to it.

But, alas! Mary Jane is growing. Soon the famous hair ribbon will be put aside, the "cunning" little "Mary Jane haircut" will be no more. The pretty frocks will be worn by less fortunate little girls to whom she will have given them. Many children may feel sorry, but not she, for her ambition is to have long hair and long skirts, and become an artist, so that she may work out her own ideas herself.

Why the Red-Haired Girl Is Lucky.

FORMERLY most girls regarded it as a real affliction to be born "red-headed." But now that red hair has become fashionable, other and better reasons appear showing that red hair is indicative of valuable qualities often absent in those whose locks are of darker or lighter hue.

In the first place, the red-haired girl is always neat. She is more stylish than either a blonde or a brunette. Give the same wardrobe to a blonde, a brunette and the red-haired girl will be better turned out than either of the others. Style is not a matter of wearing the latest cut and color of garment. It is a gift, and every red-haired girl has it.

Then the red-haired girl is amiable. When she gets angry, she gets very angry. Generally she is very sweet-tempered. Put a red-haired girl against any brunette in the matter of temper, and in the course of a week or a year the red-haired girl's record will be the better for amiability.

And she will measure up very well to the blonde's standard, too, for while the blonde has not so fierce a temper as the brunette she is more petulant about trifles. The flame of the brunette's anger burns higher, but that of the blonde, though a tinier flame, burns oftener and for more insignificant reasons.

The red-haired girl is cleverer than women of other coloring. This may raise a storm of indignation among the blondes and the black-haired women, but it is true nevertheless. A red-haired girl is never stupid. Who can say that of all the brunettes he knows? When a red-haired girl enters business she always gets on.

"Seeing New York" from Up in the Sky.

MANHATTAN Island, already the city of the skyscrapers, is soon to have a gigantic spiral tower, with trolley cars for ascent, that will rival the famous Eiffel Tower by the Seine.

John C. Ostrup, the designer of this remarkable structure, is professor of structural engineering with the Stevens Institute of Technology in Hoboken, N. J. And this is just how his wonderful scheme of "Seeing New York" from the sky is to be accomplished.

"As designed," says the inventor, "the spiral tower passes through a base 200 feet square and ninety feet high and rises to a height of 534 feet. There are no reasons, however, from an engineering standpoint, why this height could not be considerably increased without being subject to undue vibration or deflection from strong winds. [illegible] will consist of thirty-two steel [illegible] placed radically in pairs or bents, and thoroughly braced together in vertical and horizontal planes. This arrangement will give the greatest possible strength and rigidity to the structure with the least amount of expenditure.

From these columns brackets will project outward, supporting the spiral railroad tracks. On these trolley cars are to run from the ground to the top, carrying sightseers and passengers to an auditorium nearly 500 feet in the air. Above this auditorium, or concert hall, will be a refreshment pavilion, where, in the warmer months, delicacies in the eating and drinking line may me enjoyed far above the heated streets. Numerous tables and seats will here be arranged in circular rows around the tower and placed in tiers, so that those in front will not obstruct the view of the landscape for those in the rear.

"Outside and circling this refectory there will be a promenade ten feet wide, and from this dizzy height the sightseer may view hundreds of square miles of land and sea. The tower at its top will terminate in a cupola surmounted by a special observatory, provided with telescopes scanning over 2,000 square miles of scenery.

"The main building, or base," Professor Ostrup promises, with a Jules Verne charm, "will be occupied by booths, bazars, fountains, billiard halls, bowling alleys, shooting galleries, smoking and reading rooms, mirror mazes, dining rooms, summer gardens, etc., to be operated either in conjunction with or separate from the tower proper, so that all in all the amusement seeker will find a variety of entertainment at any time during the year."

Trolley cars, weighing about twenty tons and seating thirty-two passengers, will run to the top and return at the rate of eight miles per hour. These cars will, of course, be designed especially for the tower; the seats will all face outward, giving the passengers a clear view of the horizon on either the up or down trip. This is one of the main features of the Ostrup spiral tower, and one in which it will greatly surpass either the Eiffel Tower or the Ferris Wheel, for the reason that in the Ostrup tower the passengers are not carried straight up (in which case their vision would be limited to a small angle of the horizon), but are during each turn around the tower sweeping the entire circumference. With each revolution, the car rising meanwhile thirty-two feet in height, the horizen is being constantly extended, and thus the point of view keeps changing and a kaleidoscopic effect is produced during the entire ascension.

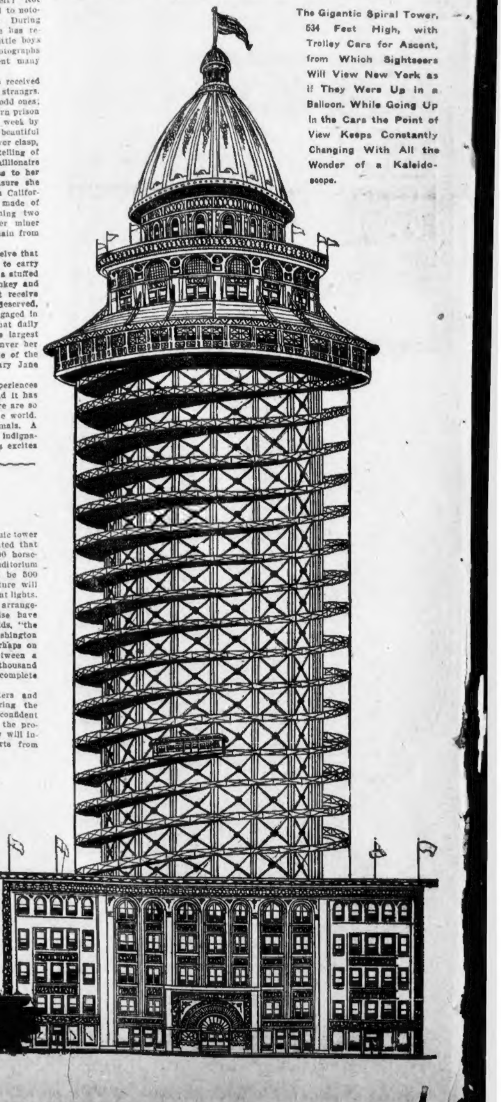
There will be two tracks. The ascending track is to be on every alternate spiral and the descending track on the spiral between. The track will be 116 feet in diameter, making the circumference 365 feet, and with twenty-four turns the total length of track will be 9,000 feet, or about one and three-fourths miles. The grade will be about 8.8 per cent—considerably less than the maximum grade operated upon by the street car systems in New York City, Boston and Kansas City—and all cars will be equipped with reliable safeguarding devices similar to those used in ascending Pike's Peak.

The cars will be of he semi-convertible type, open in pleasant weather and incased in glass in Winter, and furthermore the body of the car will be so arranged that the seats will all be on a level, whether the car be going up or down. The tracks will be inclosed with a strong hand railing to further safeguard life and property.

A prominent feature of this Titanic tower will be the lighting. It is estimated that a plant sufficient to produce 2,500 horsepower will be required. In the auditorium and other amusement places will be 500 arc lamps, while the entire structure will be garlanded by 15,000 incandescent lights.

"I think it probable that when arrangements for financing the enterprise have been completed," the professor adds, "the tower will be built either on Washington Heights or at Fort George, or perhaps on some site further downtown. Between a million and a million five hundred thousand dollars will be required to fully complete the tower, exclusive of land."

A number of wealthy promoters and capitalists are carefully considering the project now, and Mr. Ostrup is confident that the perfect practicability of the proposed tower and its daring novelty will insure prompt and favorable reports from these gentlemen.



The Gigantic Spiral Tower, 534 Feet High, with Trolley Cars for Ascent, from Which Sightseers Will View New York as if They Were Up in a Balloon. While Going Up in the Cars the Point of View Keeps Constantly Changing With All the Wonder of a Kaleidoscope.

How You Can Prevent the "Blues."

TO give way to the "blues" is worse than folly—it's the quintessence of selfishness; and instead of the sympathy meted out to a person in the doldrums, what he heartily deserves is a thorough good shaking and a real bad time.

Truly troubled persons, people who've been through the mill, are the ones who grumble the least; they know when they're well off. The other, and major portion of the community, only think they're badly done by. You'll generally find a cripple or otherwise afflicted person quite cheery. [illegible] think sha[illegible]e of yourself that you, a [illegible] individual, permit yourself [illegible], and be your own devil, [illegible] of your Eden.

[illegible]her from liver or selfish[illegible]r, take a dose of medi[illegible], take yourself seriously [illegible]in; don't try to find out [illegible]appy, but why you're miserable. Is it that you expect too much from life? The happiest man is he who is content with little for the present, and expects much from the future.

Go out into the world, and instead of comparing your misfortunes with other people's successes, realize your own blessings in life as contrasted with some other poor thing's downright bad luck.

Don't think so much about what you haven't got, as what you do possess. This is the way not to think: "Here am I, twenty—thirty—forty years of age. Not many men have worked as hard as I. I flatter myself I've got my fair share of brains, and I'm only earning a few dollars a week; while that absolute young idiot, Jones, who's never done a day's work in all his life, has more money than he knows what to do with!"

Well, what if Jones is better off than you! There's nothing in th[illegible] to make you unhappy! Instead, think how good God's been to give you your fair share of brain and your health.

Now, this is really the best way to treat your "blues." Go for a stroll in any street in any city; go with your eyes very wide open and power of observation very alert. In a few minutes you'll see a dozen poor, unfortunate beings who are truly to be pitied—poor, deformed, poverty-stricken wretches who might say with truth that they've never had a chance in life. These "blues," they're a disgrace to any healthy man or woman; and, besides, a doleful person becomes so wearisome. He may meet with a little superficial sympathy, but his acquaintances soon learn to avoid him.

The "bluer" you feel, the cheerier you should be. Some one has remarked: "We'll be a long time dead!" Then be happy, and make other people so, while you're still alive.

GLADLY WENT TO PRISON RATHER THAN PART WITH "DOGGIE"

Papa and Mamma Smith Would Have Stayed In for Life If—

THE hearts of all true dog lovers will rejoice to learn that it has not been possible for even the majesty of the law in England to permanently separate little Reggie Smith and "Nell," his affectionate collie playmate.

Wherever dogs are esteemed as the most faithful of companions and friends the father and mother of little Reggie will be applauded for the great personal sacrifice they made, though with hardly a hope of success, that justice might be done in Nell's case.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith, their little son, Reggie, and the collie live in a pretty home on Annandale road, Chiswick, in England. Reggie is the only child in the Smith family. He was born when the collie, Nell, was a puppy. Before Reggie could walk they had rolled about on the floor together. Sometimes they would be found eating pap out of the same dish.

By the time Nell was a year old she was big enough to perform a distinguished family service in teaching little Reggie to walk, as he tumbled about with his fingers clinging to her hairy coat. The child and the dog grew so fond of each other that they were unhappy if separated for even an hour. They took their noonday naps with the child resting his head on the collie's neck, and at night the dog's bed was beside Reggie's cot.

Thus together they reached the age of four years without a cloud on their happiness. Then a terrible thing happened. The collie was a very beautiful specimen of her species. One day a stranger, named Williamson, passing along the road in front of the Smith home saw Nell in the yard.

Mr. Williamson stopped to admire her. His admiration increased as he saw that she had the same markings as the mother of a collie puppy he had lost in a neighboring village nearly four years before. He called on Mrs. Smith and asked about her collie's history. She told how Mr. Smith had bought Nell when a puppy, but neither husband nor wife could remember the name of the man who had offered the dog for sale.

Mr. Williamson claimed the collie as his own—stolen from him when a puppy. The Smiths sturdily refused to part with Nell.

"Why," they said, "you might as well ask us to give up Reggie. They have never been separated for more than an hour or two at a time in their lives."

Certain that Nell really belonged to him, Mr. Williamson brought suit for possession of her. The case was brought before Judge Howland Roberts, of Brentford County Court. Both sides hired able lawyers to defend their respective claims.

The whole Smith family, including Nell, was in court. Mr. Williamson was there with the collie, which he claimed must be the mother of Nell. As a matter of fact, the two dogs were living images of each other. A deal of dog lore concerning breeds and special markings was submitted in evidence, all of which was borne out by the remarkable resemblance of Nell to Mr. Williamson's mother collie.

For awhile the Smiths were reassured by the fact that Nell paid no attention to her putative mother, but gave her whole attention to little Reggie. Mr. Smith told how he had purchased the puppy from a man, whose name and address he had not kept, and how the puppy and the boy baby had grown up together.

The Court was much affected by the loving relations between Reggie and Nell, but it was evident that Mr. Williamson was sincere in his claims; also that they appeared well founded. At length Judge Roberts reluctantly decided that Nell must be handed over to Mr. Williamson.

Little Reggie read the verdict in his mother's shocked expression. Winding his arms about the collie's neck he raised a howl that could be heard in the street. While the child wept Nell licked his face compassionately.

"Look, your honor," said Mrs. Smith, "see how the child and the dog love each other. If the other collie is Nell's mother, why are they so indifferent toward each other?"

"They were separated when the puppy was too young to remember his mother," said Mr. Williamson, "or for the mother to remember the puppy. This is understood by all breeders of dogs."

The court could do nothing but order Mr. and Mrs. Smith to surrender Nell to Mr. Williamson. But to do that they would have to use force in tearing their little son's arms from about the dog's neck. Mr. Smith made a sudden resolution.

"Your honor," he said, "we must refuse to accept your decision. We cannot consent to separate these two loving playmates. Look at them! Can you see them together and fail to see that the collie justly belongs to our son?"

The Judge said, as gently as he could, that his decision was final.

"You must surrender the dog," he said.

"We refuse to do so," said Mr. Smith.

"That is contempt of court," warned his honor.

"We are sorry," said Mr. Smith, "but we cannot consent to separate Reggie and Nell."

"The penalty for contempt of court is imprisonment," said Judge Roberts.

Mrs. Smith put her arm in her husband's. He faced the court and said respectfully, but firmly:

"We will go to prison, then."

There was no help for it. Mr. and Mrs. Smith were guilty of contempt of court and had to be punished. Mr. Williamson looked sorry, but was powerless to interfere. So Mr. and Mrs. Smith went to prison on a three weeks' sentence. Nell was torn from the loving arms of Reggie, and the weeping and disconsolate child was taken home by relatives.

Already, beside their imprisonment, this trouble had cost Mr. and Mrs. Smith nearly $300 in lawyer's fees and court charges. Worse yet, when they had served a week of their sentence Mr. Smith's employers sent word to him that they could no longer hold his place open for him.

So when the Smiths were released from prison it was necessary for sorrowing little Reggie's father to look for another position. It was a sad family party in the absence of Nell.

But the English County papers had given much publicity to the unique case. An account of it reached the eyes of the man who had sold Nell to the Smiths. Being an honest and kind-hearted man, he lost no time in appearing before the trial judge with evidence that caused him promptly to reverse his decision.

Mr. Williamson was summoned to appear with Nell, and when he learned the facts he at once hurried to the Smith home, with many apologies, and restored the collie to little Reggie's eager arms.

Then there was a reunion in the Smith family of a character so joyous that long accounts of it were printed in the newspapers, with pictures of Mr. and Mrs. Smith, and of Nell with little Reggie's arms clasped tight about her neck.

Why Men Should Beware of the Languid Girl.

HAPPILY, the languid girl type is disappearing—happily for the other sex. This type of girl is languid either by temperament or by design. If it is the former, there's some excuse for her; if the latter, none. And it is generally the latter.

She's invariably pretty, be it noted, for it would be dangerous for a plain girl to assume such airs.

The languid girl maintains an attitude of studied indifference upon all occasions. Everything is "such a bore." She moves dreamily from place to place; she answers most questions in monosyllables; she reclines frequently, and her poses are carefully considered.

Men she makes into slaves. They must play the undignified roles of beasts of burden, and carry on all the conversation as well. Do they submit? Yes, provided that she's sufficiently pretty; but even then they are apt to get a little tired.

The languid girl is dying out as a type. By a curious irony, the times that created her have, to a certain extent, made her impossible. These are strenuous days, and to men the hours are precious.

They cannot afford, if they want to make money, to waste time lavishly, and the languid girl is a terrible "waster" in this respect. She expects—nay, demands—unremitting attention from her admirers. There is to be no rapid love making to her.

The languid girl's attitude is, dispassionately judged, an uncomfortable trait. It may be graceful, and it is perhaps picturesque; but it does not somehow answer in this terribly matter-of-fact old world. Brightness, companionship and sympathy are the great keynotes of earthly happiness. And beyond all price is woman's sympathy. Not so much sentimental sympathy, if the term may be used, but the intelligent, brave sympathy that upholds a man in stress and trial and tinges dark clouds with unspeakable sweetness.

Raisuli, the Famous Moroccan Bandit Chief.

KINGS and emperors have thus far successfully resisted the efforts of enterprising theatre managers to induce them to go on the stage. Hereafter it probably will be useless for royalty to offer its services in that capacity, for a genius at popular amusement management has secured a more sensational attraction than could be furnished by any royal court of Europe.

Raisuli, the Moroccan bandit, king of all brigands, ancient or modern, with a company composed of his cutthroat followers, is now rehearsing at the London Hippodrome and will soon duplicate in the arena some of his recent feats of real brigandage with which all the civilized powers acting in concert were powerless to interfere.

From London Raisuli and his company of brigands, his realistic costumes and weapons, his native Arabian steeds and his wild Morocco mountain scenery, will come to New York—probably to the Madison Square Garden—to make Buffalo Bill's "Wild West" look like a country circus.

Less than a year ago, Raisuli was really more of an absolute monarch than any of the kings and emperors who tried in vain to suppress him. Over his subjects—comprising most of the population of Morocco between Fez and the Mediterranean—he exercised the power of life and death. If the Sultan, playing with his American toys at Fez, was negligent in responding to his demands, a grisly present of a peck or so of fingers and thumbs, or half a dozen freshly-severed heads would produce prompt action on the part of that helpless potentate, who was virtually a prisoner in his capital.

So strong was the hand of Raisuli in Morocco, and so loyal to him were immense hordes of frantical, fighting Mohammedans, and so powerless the Sultan, that distinguished diplomatists of England and France favored forgiving him all his brigand past and making him real ruler of the country.

One of Raisuli's Brigands on His Arabian Steed.

The problem was so difficult that Germany held aloof from it altogether. The United States Government had an object lesson to the same purpose when the presence of its warships at Tangier could not prevent Raisuli from exacting a ransom of $70,000 for the release of the rich American, Ion Perdicaris, after several months' captivity in the bandit's stronghold.

Mr. Perdicaris was so impressed with the abilities of Raisuli that, after his release, he urged the powers to unite in reclaiming the bandit from outlawry and causing him to be placed high in the government of his country.

Raisuli himself desired this, but as he had spent four long years chained to a prison wall in Mogador owing to mistaken faith in the Sultan's promises to respect his liberty, it would require the support of all the legations to induce him to disperse his brigand followers and enter official life.

While the encroachments of the French in Morocco were most active Raisuli's strength with the people was greatest, as the Moroccan people dislike and distrust France. But he made a trifling mistake when he selected so important a British subject as Caid Harry Maclean, the Sultan's military genius and intimate adviser, as his next captive to be held for ransom.

After Maclean had been held for seven months in the absence of the sum of $500,000, which the bandit demanded for his release, and Raisuli began to cheapen his ware, the legations got together in a way that not only secured the Caid's release for a fraction of the sum originally demanded, but compelled Raisuli to hasten to the cover of his most impregnable mountain fastness.

Here he was still so much of a menace that the difficulty was patched up somehow. Perhaps Raisuli was a bit tired and willing to take a breathing spell. At any rate, the British Government, appealed to by a London amusement manager, had no objection to Raisuli making a tour of the world.

This is how it happens that New York will presently witness a Moroccan "Wild West," with the most terrible of living bandits as the star performer.

Interest in the spectacle will no doubt be increased by the likelihood that Raisuli will get homesick on short notice and go back to Morocco to resume his brigand trade at the old stand, possibly yet to drive the Sultan from his throne.

In the amusement arenas of London and New York the real life drama of Raisuli and his trusty cutthroats will have to be very much toned down and expurgated. His record is more filled with reckless blood-letting than was that of the celebrated Italian brigand, "Fra Diavolo," who is immortalized in Auber's opera of that title.

Raisuli's mild treatment of his two recent rich captives, Perdicaris and Caid Maclean, exhibit him in his shrewd, diplomatic character. No blood was shed upon the occasions of those captures. He invited the Sultan's favorite minister to call on him in the capacity of ambassador, and then cooly notified him that he was a prisoner.

Even the capture of Perdicaris was a comparatively tame affair. The city of Tangier, in the outskirts of which the rich American's mansion stood, was more loyal to the bandit than to the Sultan. Raisuli and his followers had the freedom of all the roads and streets, and could disport themselves in the cafes to their hearts' content without fear of being molested.

All they had to do was to rush the door of Perdicaris' mansion on a dark evening, seize him and carry him off into the mountains.

It was different with the Khalifa, Abdul Malach, when that official, with an armed escort, invaded Raisuli's own mountain country on a tax-gathering expedition. The whole party was overwhelmed by the bandit's forces, the Khalifa—an old man—was seized and carried off to the bandit's castle and his escort chased out of the mountains.

Raisuli then proceeded to give Abdul Malach a lesson to teach him the enormity of gathering taxes from his faithful subjects. First the old man's beard was shaved off, and his official robes torn from him. Then he was thrown on to a heap of heated stones, where he had to dance in agony for an hour. When he begged for water his mouth was filled with dust.

Next Raisuli's executioners burned out Abdul's eyes with white-hot ramrods and withered the muscles of his limbs. Then they dressed him up as a woman, bound him to the back of a horse, and with whips sent the animal galloping back to Tangier carrying a half-dead and wholly unrecognizable tax gatherer.

While holding Harris, the English newspaper correspondent for $10,000 ransom, Raisuli's patience lasted only a week, and then Harris was obliged to notify his friends that he was on a starvation diet which threatened to disappear altogether. A few days later a headless corpse was pushed into the small room where the correspondent was confined—a gentle hint of what might happen to him unless the ransom were speedily forthcoming.

Harris lived for a week with no other company than that headless corpse. Then he wrote a letter to his wife. Harris was a rich man. The letter commanded her to pay the ransom quickly.

Raisuli is no ordinary, beetle-browed, low-born bandit. He is a Shereef—which means that his noble lineage goes back beyond Mohammed. He is not yet forty years old, and his handsome, erect figure, refined features and royal bearing command admiration even from his captives.

The latest accounts from London say that the Moroccan "Wild West" company, horses and costumes, etc., arrived in advance of the star performer, it being beneath Raisuli's dignity to hurry. His arrival is momentarily expected, however—and then the amusement loving London public will have the time of its life, with New York thirsting for its chance at the biggest stage thriller ever engineered.

Matrimonial Money Troubles.

IT is undoubtedly true that nothing causes as much unhappiness between husband and wife as difficulties over money. Money is so interwoven with happiness that happiness and money can rarely be dissociated.

But the keynote of avoiding money troubles can be found in just one word, honesty—honesty between husband and wife. Men are too apt before they are married, and after, to exaggerate their incomes. A man with $1,000 a year is ashamed to tell his wife about it. As a bachelor he has been swelling around with the air of a man with several thousands.

Some women, it is true, are inclined to considerable extravagance, but it more frequently happens they are led into extravagance through ignorance of the size of their husbands' incomes. The man who does not tell his wife the amount of his income is an unmitigated idiot—unless, of course, for prudential reasons he belittles it, and then, under some circumstances, he may be very wise. Besides, men are apt to be a bit more extravagant than their wives, but they keep it to themselves.

This little dissertation enters to no extent into the question of what kind of a girl or what kind of a man is necessary in such a case, or how much of that necessary but unknown quantity called love is essential. People who are congenial are congenial—that's all. And if they are uncongenial there's no hope for them.

It is said that men who have become great are great because their wives h[illegible] made them so. And, therefore, the earli[illegible] a man starts on the high road to greatn[illegible] the better.

The Man Who Stole The Earth

By W. Holt White.

Most Thrilling Novel of Love and Adventure Since Jules Verne's Masterpiece.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

The King of Balkania, who has a place at Cookham-on-Thames, where he is known as Mr. Montgomery Jones, is shot at from a launch by an emissary of his enemy, the King of the Sylvanians. Mr. Jones escapes, and himself shoots one of the men in the launch. The affair is witnessed by John Strong, son of Sir John Strong, who comes across the river and remarks that it seems a mistake to allow the companion of the dead man to escape. Mr. Jones replies no, as he is certain that he will return. He does so, and begs assistance to bury his dead. Strong too, lends his aid, as he is in love with the Princess Diana, who is known as Miss Diana Jones. As they take turn in digging a grave Strong ponders on the airship invention of his friend, Joe Langley, and wonders how he can utilize it to win the Princess Diana. They have scarcely buried the Sylvanian when the Princess appears on the scene. Strong asks Mr. Jones for the Princess' hand, and tells him how, by means of Langley's airship he means to become master of the earth. The King "calls" his "bluff." Strong then enlists the airship inventor, Joe Langley, in his great enterprise of winning the King's daughter.

It was not by any means love at first sight which so completely mastered their senses from the first. Both rejoiced in their own health and their own strength and their own beauty, and they rejoiced the more because of the counterpart of that health and that beauty, and that strength which they beheld also in each other.

Strong was colossally conceited; Diana was unutterably vain. Strong relied on his strength; Diana defied the world with her beauty; and both were perfectly conscious of the egotistical quality which gave them each their own particular and yet so similar outlook on life.

Strong had been invited to the millionaire's house. He lunched there, and he dined there; and he detested the gorgeous rooms and all the petty details of a restraining refinement which was wholly distasteful to his strength and really half-savage nature. He liked the open best, where the sun shone or the wind blew or the rain fell; he liked the good earth and the good water and the good wind. He could rejoice in his strength there, and there he could best appreciate the radiant personality of Diana. For Diana—as he first knew her, Diana Jones—was just as much a goddess of the open air as was the old Diana of the Silver Bow.

The accidental discovery made by a diplomatic friend who was spending a week end with Strong, that Jones was no less a person than the King of Balkania, and Diana, the Princess Diana, had not displeased Strong in the least. Socially, it set her far above him; romantically, it drew her nearer; and Strong possessed the dual capacity for romance and business that makes the daring and successful man.

It is hard to say what he would have done but for Langley, or rather Langley's invention, which he had so carefully sheltered from the public gaze and so successfully schemed to turn to his own advantage. It is, however, unnecessary to speculate upon that point, because facts are facts, and the reliability and reality of Langley's perfect airship was a patent and indisputable fact.

At the outset Strong had been innocent of any idea of turning Langley's inventive genius to his own ends. That purpose, the purpose which became a peril to other people because of Strong's necessities, had only come with the advent of Diana. He knew that it would enable him to encircle the world; he knew that it would enable [illegible] to play the part of a destroyer or a maker of men, and that part he was now fully prepared to play, since he had boldly and blindly asked for the hand of Diana, and been refused by her astute and dangerous parent.

Thus it was with a new sense of coming activity and power that he preceded the shuffling Langley into the shed at the back of the bungalow, where was housed the concern which was to alter the face of civilization.

It was growing dusk by now, and the silver symmetry of the airship gleamed in the shadows.

It had taken a year to build, bit by bit. It had been Strong who, in his caution, had drawn skilled mechanics from different parts of the country to complete each section of the machine.

These mechanics, keen-eyed men with grubby hands, had done their work in ignorance of what they were doing. They had worked alone in the little outhouse, under the directions of Langley, and the money, which was handed to them with an apparently over-generous hand by Strong, was sufficient to lull any suspicions that they might have harbored.

So now the airship stood perfect and beautiful in its perfection. Its length was about fifteen feet and its shape the shape of a cigar. It was decked at either end, as a life-boat is decked, and in the centre rose a small conning tower of a shape that one is familiar with on submarines. Just aft of the midship was a well which would comfortably seat two persons.

In the centre of the well was a little table, and arranged in a neat row on an aluminum slab a succession of bright ivory buttons. Four shafts, hinged at the bases so that they could be lowered like the funnel of a Thames steamer rose to the height of twelve feet, two in the bows and two in the stern. They were surmounted by curiously wing-shaped aluminum propellers—indeed, in appearance they were rather like large electric fans.

At the fore and stern of the craft were two other wing-like propellers fixed to horizontal steel shafts that could be run in and out like the bowsprit of a sailing boat.

The engines, infinitely compact, occupied a space not much larger than is enclosed by the bonnet of a good-sized motor-car. They were worked by electricity, and a neat row of batteries was housed in an aluminum-framed, glass-sided, glass-topped case.

At last Strong turned to Langley and linked his arm through his.

"Look here, old chap," he said. "Have I your leave to do as I want to do with this airship?"

"I suppose so," said Langley, and he did not take his eyes off the machine. It did not occur to him to dispute Strong's will, query Strong's motives.

"I am entirely dependent on you," said Strong, and his voice was strangely confident for a man who pleads dependency. "I need this invention of yours to win Diana. I confess that even that motive does not seem at the moment particularly worthy, and yet, and yet, I feel—or, hang it all! I can't exactly explain to you why—that it will be a worthy motive some day."

Now Langley from afar off had beheld through his gold-rimmed spectacles the astounding radiance of Diana. The rays of her dazzling personality had fallen on him, but only so faintly that he found Diana herself was unattainable.

She had, indeed, not swayed him sufficiently to allow her to outweigh the devotion which he felt was due to Strong. Strong it was to a great extent who had inspired him; Strong it was who had cheered him in his long task; Strong it was who had sheltered him and protected him from intrusion in the work to which he had given his life. He was grateful with a gratitude passing the love of women, and oblivious of the fact that the sacrifice which he was making was altogether too great. He surrendered everything to Strong.

"If she will help you win Diana," he said, nodding in the gloom at the air-ship, "you can do whatever you like; only," he added, falteringly, after the manner of the woman who makes a concession against her will, "only—I will look to you to see us through the trouble that you are bound to make."

"Trouble!" said Strong. "Troubles, my dear chap, are only made to be surmounted. I am looking for trouble now. I want to find it. Trouble is the only way to Diana. Trouble and I shall be friends.

"To-night," he went on, "we will put the thing to one last test, and we will give it a name worthy of the cause. We will call the air-ship the 'Di.'"

"And the die is cast," said Langley. He tittered; it was seldom he made jokes.

"Then out with her—out into the dark and let us see what we can do," cried Strong, and he laid his great hands on the gunwale and bent his body forward to run the airship down the slips on which she rested.

Slowly the little vessel got under way. Then the two men, without a word, clambered in. Langley pressed the button marked "A," and the wing-like propellers at the bows and the stern of the aluminum craft slowly began to revolve.

The slips ran down a little, and then up a slight incline, fashioned somewhat after the manner of a switchback.

As they came to the limits of the slips Langley pressed the button "B."

Overhead the winglike propellers on the uprights began to revolve swiftly.

With a sickly little plunge the "Di" drifted off the end of the slips and rose quietly and silently into the cool, fresh air of the Summer night.

CHAPTER VIII.

Testing the Wonderful Airship.

The rush of air in his face brought out Strong's latent forces to the full.

"Shift over a bit, sonny," he said, "and let me have the buttons. If you think she'll stand it, we'll play a tune on the 'Di' to-night that we have not done before."

"All right," said Langley, and he shuffled his lanky body to make way for Strong.

"First of all," said Strong, "we'll test her in the paddock."

The paddock lay beneath them, about two acres in extent, and was really only a rough clearing cut in a thick wood of young pine trees.

Strong put his finger on the button "S," which stood for "Slow," then on the button "L," which stood for "Lower." They dropped softly down a few feet above the ground.

Strong sat with his feet on the pedals which turned the ship to port and starboard—to left and right.

He turned her in against the trees, and then brought her head round again very silently and softly at about five miles an hour. They circled round the paddock.

"The best thing, I think," he said at length, "would be to take her in the middle and then let her jump. I suppose she will jump all right?"

"Try her," said Langley. His thin smile was drawn nearly toward his ears. His eyes glistened with affectionate pride behind his gold-rimmed spectacles.

Strong brought the "Di" round again and put her head due north. With an ease brought with long practice on a dummy keyboard, he placed his thumb on "Up." The "Di" quivered, and then the earth rushed away from them.

The key of the recorder before them was working slowly round.

"Two thousand," said Strong, and placed his fingers on "Steady." The "Di" hovered, quivering like a hawk poised. The simile seemed to strike him.

"By gad, old man!" he cried, "this is a new feeling. We are birds to-night—birds of prey."

"Not yet, I hope," said Langley, and he glanced over the edge of the little craft. The surface of the earth could be dimly seen in the darkness, lying flat and still.

"Good, so far," said Strong; "more than good—excellent! Now to see what we can do. Mind you, in the future, when we've built the ship we want (and this boat's only a toy), we shall have to do many queer things. I propose to practise by putting fear into some one down below. The actual method will be by burglary.

"The moon is young, the wind east, and so we will wait till it's a bit darker—and for the rain."

He pointed westward, and Langley saw a cloud-bank crawling slowly over the far horizon of the distant world.

So they hung there, two thousand feet above the bungalow, for nigh upon an hour. Above them the propellers whirred with no more noise than that of the purring of some great cat.

The little air-craft was not entirely still, and so what they could see of the earth beneath them quivered quickly like the film of a cinematograph in full play. Far away to the eastward the lights of London shone like the faint glow of a distant prairie fire. Here and there below them they could discern a few feeble lights. Thus they waited for the cloud bank to steal nearer and nearer, until at length it interposed itself between them and the earth like a soft, diaphanous curtain.

When the curtain had been entirely drawn across between them and the world, Strong put his pipe back into his pocket and braced himself to once again play the tune which he had threatened on the bright ivory buttons.

"Now for the world," he said, "and burglary."

The "Di" sank softly down; the hawk of the air had hovered long enough. Now she swooped toward her prey, but the swoop was stayed 100 feet or so above the pine wood behind the bungalow.

Strong turned the "Di" round and headed slowly across the river, northeast, and so made for St. Nicholas's Church.

All below them was very still and silent. The mist was thick.

The tower of the church rose up against them quietly out of the darkness.

"Now we will see," said Strong, "how we can steer her." And he put the "Di" gently in against the belfry.

As they were getting alongside the parapet of the tower Strong took his coat off and hung it over the starboard of the gunwale of the airship.

"Don't wait to scrape her," he said.

With a soft bump the "Di" came to a standstill alongside of the tower, the propellers purring above her.

"What on earth are you going to do?" asked Langley.

Strong, still coatless, rolled up his shirt sleeves and put his hands on the parapet.

"I am going to unship a bell," he said "and put it on the handiest tombstone in the graveyard. To-morrow they will find it there, and to-morrow night London will be ringing with the news of the bell that is not ringing. St. Nicholas's Church is about to afford a mystery that probably never will be explained at all. Just think how you and I would feel if we had any interest or any pride in any particular church, and were to wake up in the morning and find one of its cherished bells reposing in the graveyard, while the locks of the church were intact, and there was no evidence of any kind of entry—burglarious or otherwise."

"But what is the purpose of the joke" asked Langley.

"It isn't a joke, my dear chap," said Strong. "It is a test; it is a test of the 'Di's' efficiency and a test of our own daring. If we can do a little thing like this, we can do a much better one later. I simply want to see how we can steer your ship before I proceed to more desperate deeds to-night."

Langley, looking a little puzzled, peered at Strong in the darkness, but he said nothing.

Strong stepped on to the platform of the tower and began to grope in the darkness. He did not make much sound, and presently Langley heard matches being scraped somewhere within the spire. The matches went out and all was silent. A few minutes later Strong thrust his head and shoulders over the parapet, and his face wore a broad grin.

"It is only a little 'un," he said, "but as much as I can carry." He drew back, and with a heave of his shoulders hoisted a brazen bell to the parapet.

Langley looked at the bell a little doubtfully. "It is a bit of weight," he said. "I will give her an extra touch—only be quick."

The propellers overhead purred a little more loudly, while Strong straddled the parapet, squeezing the shell of the "Di" between his leg and the wall of the tower. With a grunt and a swift jerk of his whole frame, he lifted the bell and placed it square on the deck of the "Di." A second later he was on board himself, and they were sailing slowly downward.

"Now for another test," he said. "We will have to see if the 'Di' will stand, just as one sees that a horse can stand. Let's fetch her up on the path there."

Down and down went the "Di" till she hung just above the path. Strong played on a button, and four steel legs, shaped in telescopic fashion, ran out from the bottom of the airship and gritted on the gravel path. The "Di" stood as steady as an old cab horse on a rank. The men climbed out of her without a word and lifted out the bell.

"The path's as good as any place," said Strong, and they laid the bell on the gravel. "Fine!" he said. "Now I am perfectly certain we can do anything. The next bit of business will be a trifle more exacting and a trifle more exciting, but we cannot possibly fail. All aboard!" he cried, gaily, but below his breath, and they clambered back again.

The telescopic legs of the "Di" drew in to the hull with the sinuous movement of a snail drawing into its shell. The "Di" rose into the air. Now they headed south again and floated over the roof of Hedza House, across the plantation, and so for a little distance above the high road to the Feathers Inn. Here Strong put the helm hard over, and for three or four hundred yards or so they headed due east. They were low down, just escaping the topmost branches of a wood. A little way beyond, Langley, straining through his glasses, could see an old mansion lying lost in slumber. At the edge of the wood Strong dropped still lower, and kept the "Di" lying close in among the branches of the trees at the edge of the drive.

"This," said he, "is Stapleton House, the abode of Lady Stapleton. I explain the fact because you are such a stay-at-home kind of person that you probably do not know even the geography of your immediate neighborhood."

Langley nodded.

Strong leant back in the "Di" and began to speak as one delivering a mock lecture. "I may inform you," he said, "that Stapleton House is famous for its magnificent state bedroom. I am told that it is a gloomy apartment, running for some fifty feet over the main entrance, which is sheltered by a porch. Lady Stapleton, I may further inform you, for your particular edification, is an ancient dame whose only joy in life is to wear the full regalia of the family heirloom jewels every night at dinner. She is a person who has no faith in any one in the world except herself, and so these jewels, which are worth a king's ransom, are kept by her ladyship in her own room.

"It is common gossip, too, that she is exceedingly careless as to their housing at night. Indeed, the rumor has even reached me that they lie jumbled together in an old jewel case on her dressing table. If that is so then our theft will be easy. As the Americans would say, I am going to lift the jewels."

"Good Lord!" said Langley. "You are not really going to steal them!"

"Yes," said Strong. "I am. I am really going to steal them. Not for my own personal gain as far as lucre is concerned, not to sell them or pawn them, or do anything with them which will bring me profit, but for the purpose of reading an extremely wholesome lesson to her ladyship, and a far more wholesome lesson to another gentleman to whose establishment you shall be presently introduced."

Strong peered intently at the old house lying about a couple of hundred yards or so away.

"I'll bet the old lady sleeps sound and snores; still, it's always wise—even though it is Irish to say it—to take no risks where there are risks. Hang on to the porch while I do my little bit of housebreaking, and if you see me dashing out of the window, stand ready to jump. Then we shall get away clear, and if the old woman tells the police a tale of burglars by airship they will simply laugh her to scorn, and that lovely grandson of hers will have an additional excuse to urge the Commissioners in Lunacy to action. Now for it."

Strong put the "Di" across to the porch and brought her alongside with the niceness and precision of the keenest middy fetching up a launch against a warship. For all his bulk, Strong was quick and sure as a cat, and he was across the concrete roof of the porch and feeling quickly and softly along the edge of the French windows before Langley had time to realize that he was alone.

Langley saw the French windows, which stood ajar, pulled a little wider open, revealing thick, heavy curtains drawn close to. Strong crouched, and a moment later the curtains had swallowed him up.

Langley sat in the "Di" with his heart pounding like a piston-rod. His nervous imagination conjured up a thousand frightful eventualities—the prospect of a non-understanding superintendent of police, chilly cells, and endless remands, and finally a long sentence which even Strong's influential relatives and the immense wealth at the back of him would not suffice to have reduced.

So loud and fast and painfully did his heart beat that his ears began to sing. He clutched at the side of the "Di" in terror, and he felt that his head was swimming away from his body.

But just as he felt the strain was becoming more than he could bear, the curtains opened softly once again, and Strong, with a grin of childish triumph all across his face, came through them with cat-like tread.

Once outside the curtains he sprang up, closed the French windows again, and then strolled with noiseless feet across the porch to the "Di."

"Got 'em!" was all he said, and he deposited an old, battered leather jewel case on the seat beside him.

Then they went up, up, up, and the recorder marked three thousand feet.

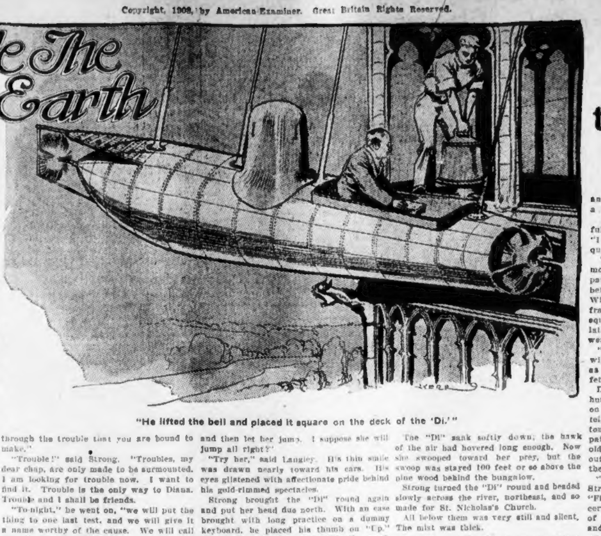
When the "Di" hovered, silent and stationary, Strong took the jewel case on to his knees. "Let's see what we've got," he said.

He forced the rickety lock with a penknife, opened the lid and whistled with amazement. The light of the stars was sufficient to make the jumbled mass of jewels dance and gleam.

"If I were a poor man, or a dishonorable man," he said, "I would hang on to them, but the dear old lady shall only lose them for a few hours, and the suspicion won't rest on me. I will make Scotland Yard puzzle its best brains to-morrow."

"But it is a little bit early yet, so we'll get down to earth again and take a spin. What do you say to a look at Maidenhead? Personally, I am hungry, and should not be sorry for a bite. Lucky we brought some cold chops!" And he brought the meat in which he so rejoiced out of the pocket of his shooting jacket."

(To Be Continued Next Sunday.)



"He lifted the bell and placed it square on the deck of the 'Di.'"

FREE Silk Remnants

We have recently been so fortunate as to come in touch with the enormous output of a great silk factory so that we are enabled to buy great quantities of beautiful silk remnants at an especially low wholesale price. We have arranged to purchase for you that class of remnants which is especially adapted for crazy quilts, sofa pillows, etc., as well as for use in fancy work, art and needlework. Therefore the big assortment of silk pieces here displayed is made up of some of the most delicately variegated colors of fine, rich silk ever offered in a remnant assortment. Brilliant sky blues, reds, greens and soft-toned yellows give exceptional character to this great color collection. Now, this entire big assortment of silk pieces is given ABSOLUTELY FREE to all who mail a quarter—25 cents—for two years' full subscription to the biggest national monthly published at a popular price, AMERICAN HOME MAGAZINE. This big, new periodical has drawn upon all the almost unlimited resources of a great publishing organization for its endless variety of startling features. Here you will find the provokingly funny color cartoons, the screamingly odd Happy Hooligan, Buster Brown, And Her Name Was Maud, and the dozen and one other marvellous creations of those master minds of mirth and fun—Opper, Dirks, Bunny, Outcault—and all the rest. Of the magazine's great editorial writers only a few of the dozens upon dozens can here be mentioned. Among these are: ELLA WHEELER WILCOX, the most brilliant woman in contemporary American life; DINKELSPIEL, the inimitable—the man who has set all the world a-laughing; MAURICE MAETERLINCK, Belgium's foremost living philosopher and litterateur; CLARA MORRIS, the noted actress, who will write of life on the stage and of the busy world. PROF. GARRETT P. SERVISS, who has magically transformed the mysteries of science into tales of marvellous romance, and BEATRICE FAIRFAX, the most brilliant, cleverest woman who has ever written on love, romance and the things of the heart. These are but a FEW of the master minds who will contribute regularly to the great new monthly. For the strange—the unlike—the fascinating—read the brilliantly interesting new AMERICAN HOME MAGAZINE.

FREE OFFER. To all who will mail their quarter AT ONCE we will give in addition, FREE, a copy of our great 64-page book, "Fancy-Work Manual," containing 93 fine engravings, and describing all forms of needlework, crocheting, knitting and embroidery. Therefore to secure ALL THREE offers—the big free Silk Collection, the big 64-page "Fancy-Work Manual," and two full years' subscription to AMERICAN HOME MAGAZINE, mail a quarter now—to-day—to

HER EASTER HAT—TWENTY ONE INCHES ACROSS

By Mrs. Cholly Knickerbocker.

What Extremes of Crowns and Brims Are Seen in the Easter Hats!

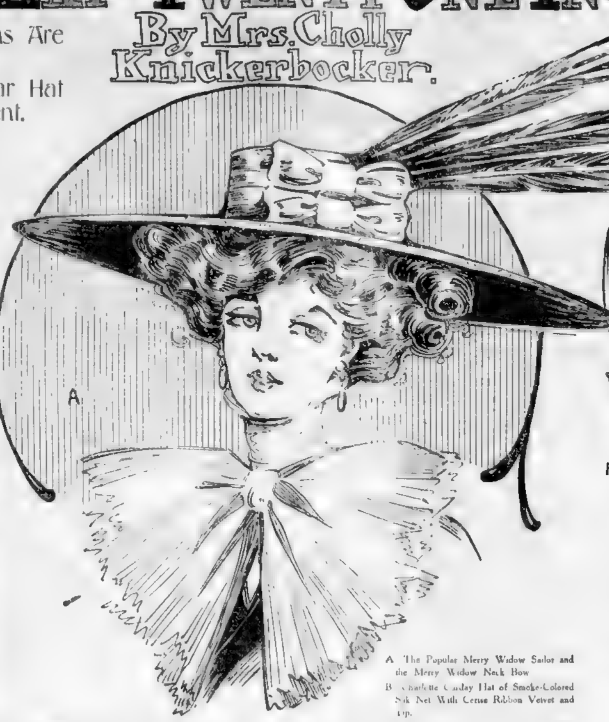
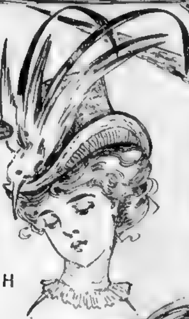
Marvellous Small Hats With High Crowns and Narrow Brims Are the Latest. Extraordinary Birds and Flowers Are Rivals in Trimming.

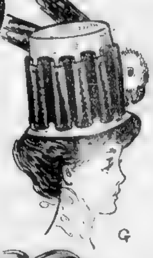
IF all the birds on all the Easter hats began to talk what a merry chirping there would be!

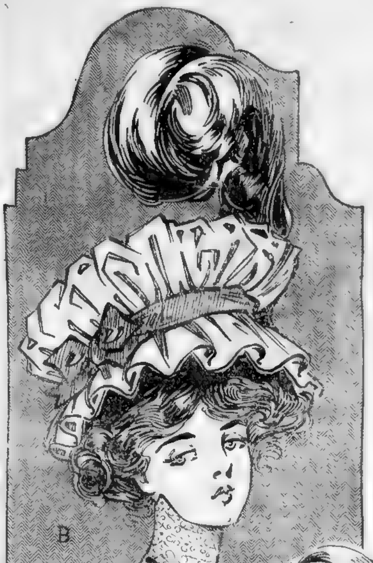
White parrots with gay pink beaks would insist that "Polly wants a cracker!" All the sedate little owls would wake up and screech shrilly. Birds of unknown varieties would chatter in unknown tongues, although it wouldn't surprise me too much if some of them spoke the jargon of our common American barnyard fowl.

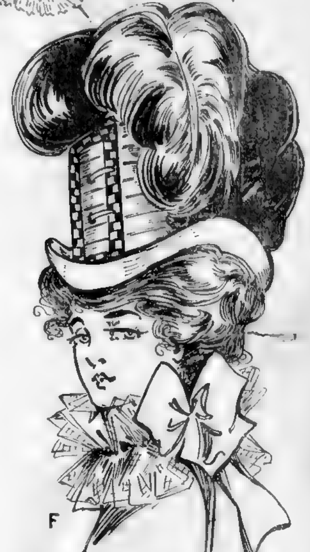
For that all kinds of feathered creatures flourish on one's fine Easter hat there is no denying. Sometimes they [illegible] singly—a sea gull spreads its wings over the crown of a walking hat, sometimes in flocks—four and twenty little blackbirds not baked in a pie, but airily perched on the broad brim of a flat shape. Birds of all colors, of every plumage, many never before seen on land or sea, they have come to take part in the Easter hat parade.

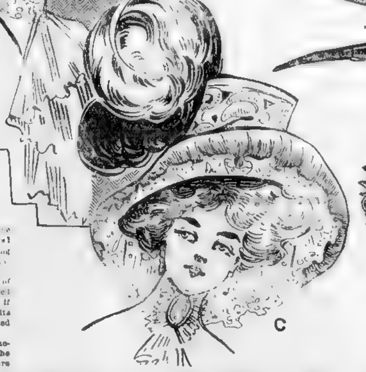


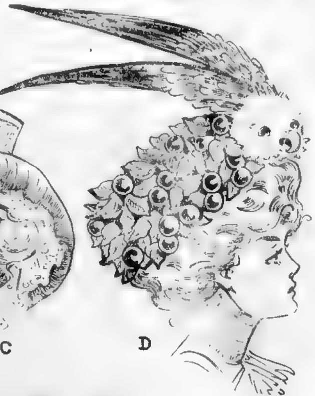


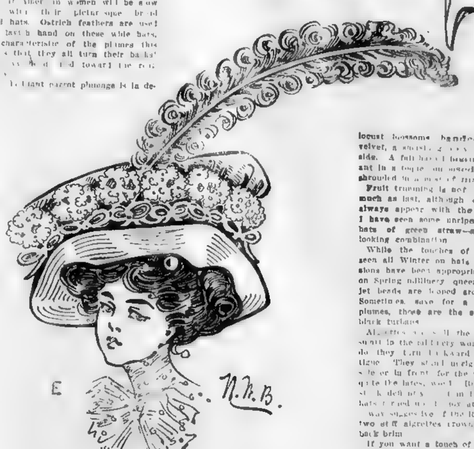












A. The Popular Merry Widow Sailor and the Merry Widow Neck Bow.

B. Charlotte Corday Hat of Smoke-Colored Silk Net With Cerise Ribbon Velvet and Tip.

C. High Crowned Romney Shape With Under Frill of Lace.

D. Toque of Red Cherries and Green Leaves Ornamented with a Life Size Parrot.

E.—Hat of Old Blue Straw With Tan Crown, Trimmed With Bunches of Flowers and Ostrich Feather Quill.

F. The Postillon Hat and Pierrot Puff—Two Favorites of Paris.

G. High Crowned Hat of White Chip, Trimmed With Black Velvet Ribbon and a Parrot.

H. The New Effect, Narrow at the Sides, and Projecting Far in Front and Behind.

And after all, what could be more Spring-like—except, perhaps, flowers! They, too, are here in abundance. Spring flowers, violets and lilies of the valley, the blazing poppies of July, even gorgeously tinted Autumn leaves. Toques of cherries there are, great luscious red cherries—and alighted in the front, as if quite contented with his surroundings, sits a perky parrot! No doubt he has feasted well.

Certainly no one can complain of monotony in color, shape or fabric in the millinery worn this Spring. There are [illegible] and velvet which are usually counted a Spring [illegible] have lost their popularity this year. There is too great a liking for [illegible] coloring.

Almost without exception the new hats, be they large or small, roll at the left side [illegible] the straight brim [illegible] before long [illegible] and the coquettish [illegible] the Charlotte Corday hat [illegible] close ruffles and [illegible]. This is most charming [illegible] youthful face and is [illegible] of [illegible] tulle [illegible] onto a wire [illegible]. The downturning ruffles are held [illegible] with an under brim of wire, [illegible] they do not hang too flatly on the [illegible]. The crown is puffed up airily, caught [illegible] here and there and circled [illegible] band of ribbon [illegible] in a lovers' knot [illegible] little [illegible] of small flowers are tucked in around the crown. Sometimes two short back turning tips nod in front. Nothing could be more youthful or picturesque.

But picturesqueness is a feature of many of the latest models. I can imagine fashionable hat designers studying the old masters, seizing upon an idea and then rushing back, copying, modifying it and bringing it up to date. One of the results is the Romney hat, which, little changed, is one of the Spring's best productions. The little frilly [illegible] effect under [illegible], which made its appearance in [illegible] last Winter, is now introduced here. The Gainsborough is no longer a new story, but is here in more generous lines and with more profusion of [illegible] and [illegible] never [illegible] that [illegible] crowns and [illegible] of New [illegible] crushed down in a way that suggests that [illegible] brother [illegible] sisters new Spring headgear.

The [illegible] high crowned [illegible] hat is with us, but so also is the Merry Widow sailor [illegible] hats your [illegible] reported as revelling in a [illegible] color [illegible] the favorites [illegible] effective [illegible] how few are the becoming [illegible] a soft [illegible] the tapestry [illegible] Winter [illegible] and a faded [illegible] of course [illegible] plumes than ever. To the Empire period of dress we are indebted for the quaint little very high crowned hats with little or no brim and all the trimming plastered against the crown.

These small, brimless hats are "the new thing" and will be extremely good style for wear with tailored frocks. But for afternoon and evening wear it will be [illegible] American women will be slow [illegible] with their picturesque broad [illegible] hats. Ostrich feathers are used with a lavish hand on these wide hats, but a characteristic of the plumes this season is that they all turn their backs [illegible] toward the rear.

[illegible] brilliant parrot plumage is in demand for tailored hats. Wings with green, yellow, red and blue mingled in their coloring are seen in good models. Mephisto quills—that is, long, very long, pointed quills curving at the tips—are used to trim [illegible]. But ordinary everyday quills are seen on many smart hats. Quills made of ostrich feathers are one of the season's novelties.

Many new straw models show an underbrim of contrasting color. Thus a hat of [illegible]-colored straw will be faced with a straw braid of vivid green, a color note repeated in the trimming.

Hats seem to be crammed down on the head further than ever. Indeed, some small women quite disappear under their Easter headgear and peer up from under the extinguishing brim in the eeriest way. Bandeaus are almost a thing of the past, although they are still sometimes used to give the fashionable tilt at the left side.

Boat-shaped hats, narrow at the sides and projecting far in front and rear, are found in exclusive shops. These demand the new coiffure of Grecian outline to support the back brim. But when properly worn they have great chic.

With the Spring flowers, inevitably appear flower toques. This year they are more than usually lovely. One charming toque seen the other day was of white locust blossoms banded with [illegible] velvet, a [illegible] at one side. A full-blown beauty [illegible] in a toque composed of violet orchids shrouded in a mist of maiden hair fern.

Fruit trimming is not used this year as much as last, although cherries (on hats) always appear with the early birds, and I have seen some unripe apples adorning hats of green straw—an [illegible] looking combination.

While the touches of gold and silver seen all Winter on hats for festive occasions have been appropriately [illegible] on Spring millinery, queer strings of large jet beads are looped around black hats. Sometimes, save for a couple of stiff plumes, these are the sole trimming on black turbans.

Aigrettes are still the smartest [illegible] in the millinery world, [illegible] do they turn backward in [illegible]. They stand upright, either at the side or in front, for the military effect is quite the latest word. [illegible] hats turned up [illegible] way suggestive of the [illegible] two stiff aigrettes crowning their [illegible] back brim.

If you want a touch of bright color with your Easter suit have a hat of cerise or some of the coral pink shades, with a waistcoat of silk [illegible] to match, [illegible] you can feel yourself quite safely in the "fashion." The waistcoats grow in beauty day by day. In many of the work baskets will be found bits of satin brocades in process of [illegible] into [illegible] these [illegible] of waist [illegible] girls' friends.

Pierrot [illegible] of [illegible] or [illegible], worn tightly around the neck and having a bow and ends either at the back or under the left ear, are a fancy sent us from Paris which will be eagerly welcomed by the Easter girl. And not a one are they for the girl of generous allowance or comfortable bank account, for they are quite possible of copying by the maiden of slender purse but nimble fingers.

Sunday American-Examiner Patterns—No. 353.

A Dainty Summer Frock for the Little Maid, Designed for the Home Dressmaker.

THIS charming little dress in the popular over-blouse style is shown in a [illegible] development of white linen, prettily trimmed with soutache braid. The square cut neck and circular sleeve caps make the mode equally suitable for wear either with or without a guimpe.

The full skirt is laid in simulated box-pleats corresponding with the waist, which closes in the back under a pleat. Linen, chambray, gingham and challis may be chosen for the making. The eight-year size will require 5½ yards of 36-inch material.

The patterns have been cut in sizes for 4, 6, 8, 10, 12 and 14 years.

To obtain this pattern, carefully fill in the accompanying blank and send with 10 cents in silver or stamps to

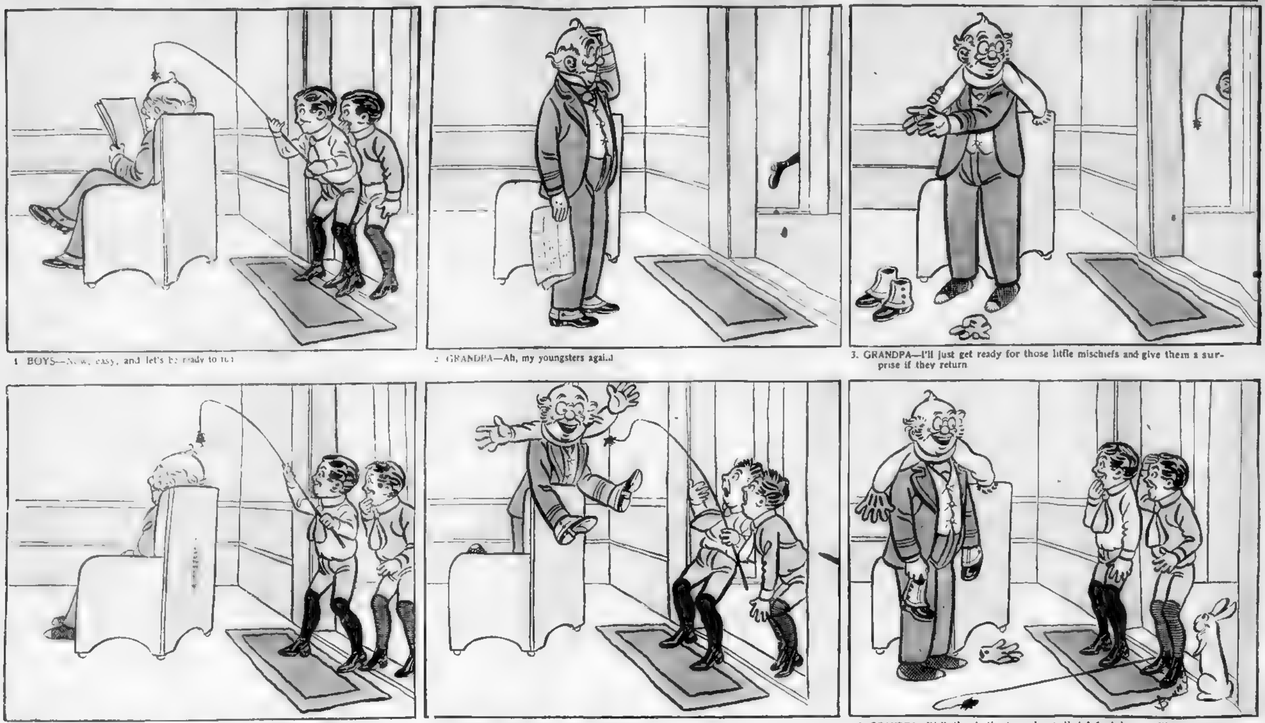
OXY RANDPA

The Boys at Their Old Tricks with Granlpa Again.



1. BOYS—Now, easy, and let's be ready to run

2. GRANDPA—Ah, my youngsters again

3. GRANDPA—I'll just get ready for those little mischiefs and give them a surprise if they return

4. BOYS—Oh, this is a good one on Gran'pa, all right!

5. GRANDPA—Why, hello boys! Is that you?

6. GRANDPA—Well, this is the time, boys, that I fooled you with my muffler, my gloves and my shoes!

DON'T STAY FAT

We Reduce Fat and Will Prove It

We have had such wonderful success with our method of reducing superfluous fat that we have decided to offer—for a limited time—Free trial treatments to Readers of this paper. Look at these two pictures. They show the effect our Kresslin Treatment has had in hundreds of cases, and there is no reason why it won't do the same for you. Hundreds of testimonials on file show that our treatment TAKES OFF FAT AT THE RATE OF 5 POUNDS A WEEK, and what is more, that the FAT DOES NOT RETURN when the treatment is finished. This treatment is PERFECTLY HARMLESS, and does not interfere in any way with your daily habits. REQUIRES NO EXHAUSTING EXERCISES OR STARVATION DIET. No matter where the excess fat is located—stomach, bust, hips, cheeks, neck—it will quickly vanish when you take the Kresslin Treatment, and the entire system will be strengthened.

Obesity Is a Disease

Do you know that superfluous fat is a disease! That it leads to internal complications, that it undermines the health, and eventually shortens life from five to twenty years? Many people are too stout without knowing it. A woman five feet six inches tall should not weigh more than 138 lbs.; five feet four inches tall, 126 lbs.; five feet two inches tall, 118 lbs. The normal weight of a man six feet tall is 175 lbs.; five feet ten inches tall, 164 lbs.; five feet six inches tall, 145 lbs. If you exceed these weights you are too stout—and you should immediately take steps to reduce your weight.

(See Mrs. Jesse O. Hall's Letter Below)

No woman can be beautiful who is much over weight, for no artifice of the dressmaker can overcome the pudgy, [illegible] and awkward appearance of the fat woman. But the Kresslin Treatment reduces [illegible] obstinate case of obesity—and We stand ready to prove it at our expense. [illegible]

Mrs. J[illegible]e O. Hall, of [illegible]ord, Ind., says: "It is [illegible] very great [illegible] that I write to tell you what [illegible] Kresslin Treatment has done for me. When I started to use it I weighed just 230 pounds and my health was very poor. Your most valuable Kresslin Treatment has [illegible] my weight to 1[illegible]8 pounds, and at the same time it has made such a difference for the better in my general health that I feel stronger and better in every possible way. In fact I consider myself now in perfect health and [illegible] shape and figure are just right for my height [illegible]."

Mr. J. J. Thompson, of Durham, N. C., says: "I [illegible] some time ago and have been [illegible] that my re[illegible] I now feel sure that it is. I [illegible] I am to have been relieved of [illegible] superfluous fat that has troubled me [illegible] I feel better than I have for years."

Miss Amy Smith, of De Ruyter, N. Y., says: "I am sure that I cannot speak too highly of your Kresslin Treatment for Obesity when I consider what great good it has done for me. It is indeed a [illegible] medicine, and unless I had proved it in my own case I don't think I could ever have believed that any remedy could have taken excessive fat off so quickly and yet so safely and pleasantly. In the short time I have used your Kresslin Treatment I have lost fifty pounds in weight, and I must say that since reducing I never felt better in health in all my life."

Rev. Mary Kimball, 106 So. Jackson St., Janesville, Wis., says: "Having tested and proven the merits of your reduction [illegible] I [illegible] pleasure [illegible] my testimony to those [illegible] who tried and have derived much benefit [illegible] of treatment for obesity. None of my garments fit me, they seem made for another woman."

The above letters were selected at random, and are only a few of the many we receive almost daily. We have hundreds of others on file, which we will gladly show to any one interested.

You know that you cannot be healthy and happy while you suffer from obesity. Fat people are barred from many pleasures and are subject to such diseases as Asthma, Kidney Trouble, Rheumatism and Heart Disease. Our Kresslin Treatment cures all these by removing their cause—excess of fat.

BOSTON AMERICAN, SUNDAY, APRIL 12, 1908.

THE NATIONAL SPHINX

THE readers of this newspaper and other earnest, thinking, INDEPENDENT citizens, are represented in this cartoon. Independence is a growing power.

Independent thought and the independent vote that follows it are agitating the old parties accustomed to driving voters like sheep into one pen labelled "Democrat" or into another pen labelled "Republican"—and selling both pensful to the highest bidder—or rather to the ONLY bidder, which is the corporation nowadays.

This independent voter and thinker of America is represented in this picture as a sort of an Uncle Sam Sphinx with the Liberty eagle on his shoulder. You remember the old Sphinx of the myth. That old Sphinx had a disagreeable way of asking a question. And if you couldn't answer it—which you couldn't—you were gobbled up.

The Democratic donkey and the Republican elephant remember that old Sphinx uneasily as they look at the independent, sphinx-like, thinking man of to-day and WONDER WHAT HE IS GOING TO DO.

The question which this modern sphinx puts before the people, also before the donkey and the elephant, is this: "Why should free-thinking men be governed by machine and party politicians? Why should the son of a Lincoln Republican be the servile tool of a modern Republican boss? Wh[illegible] should the descendant [illegible] Jeffersonian Democrat [illegible] the party catspaw of the riff-raff of Democratic party management to-day?"

The old-fashioned party has seen its day. There's too much reading done now—and too much thinking—so the party bosses say, and from their own point of view they say wisely.

A man must either think for himself or not think at all. If you alllow party managers who don't consult you, don't represent you, and who care nothing about you except to get your votes to rule you and the country, why have the power of thought at all?

Party government would be an admirable thing in an asylum for idiots, if you call two-thirds of the idiots Republicans and one-third Democrats, and give them torches, let them parade and shout, let them listen to a few cut and dried speeches. Let them deposit phony ballots under different emblems. And then let a few intelligent keepers, or "party managers," exercise the real power and decide all questions for the poor idiots.

The idiot asylum really needs party management hard and fast.

But the United States, after all, isn't an idiot asylum. Millions of voters are capable of thought; their thought and belief should have some effect on public affairs. They observe that the distress of the party boss is a good sign for the average citizen. And they have noticed epochs of great progress have been marked by the breaking down of party machinery. And they think it is about time for a new breakdown, for a permanent abolition of [illegible] modern party notion [illegible] citizen is fit to pa[illegible] vote perfunctorily, but not fit to decide anything for himself.

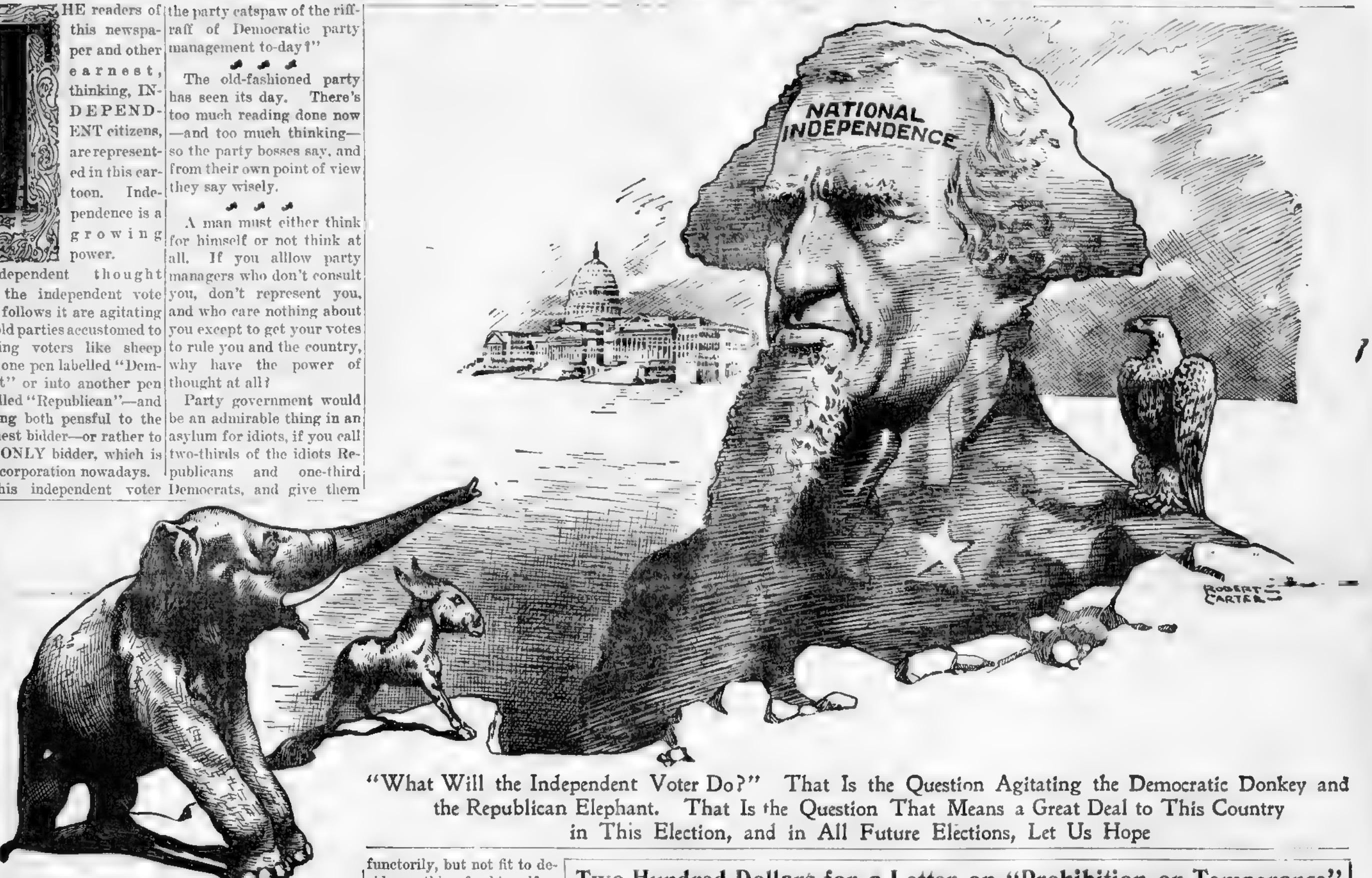
There's a good deal of thinking going on in the independent American head at this moment. The blundering donkey, usually for sale cheap, and an unusually foolish donkey when roaming free on his own account, isn't a pleasing animal to contemplate as a ruler.

And the heavy Republican elephant, patient, burden-bearing drudge for corporations and plutocratic powers, is a pretty thoroughly discredited beast.

The people want to see AN ACTUAL, LIVING PARTY OF THE PEOPLE, giving talent an opportunity, expressing the actual beliefs and wishes of the people, not trashy, meaningless party twaddle.

The donkey and the elephant before many years will go to join the dodo and the other extinct, useless creatures.

This country has had enough of government by party, which has come to mean government by plutocracy. And the day has come for GOVERNMENT BY INDEPENDENT THOUGHT.



"What Will the Independent Voter Do?" That Is the Question Agitating the Democratic Donkey and the Republican Elephant. That Is the Question That Means a Great Deal to This Country in This Election, and in All Future Elections, Let Us Hope

Two Hundred Dollars for a Letter on "Prohibition or Temperance"

Mr. Pabst's Discussion Will Interest the Entire Country

We have received from the editor of the Cosmopolitan Magazine, with permission to publish it, the following letter written by Gustave Pabst:

To the Editor of the Cosmopolitan Magazine:

Dear Sir—Many thanks for your check for $200 in payment for my contribution on "Temperance vs. Prohibition" in the May number of the Cosmopolitan. As an amateur in literary work and in public discussion, I prefer not to accept this payment.

But as I am very much interested in the whole question involved in the present drink legislation and in a sane solution of one of our big problems, I will pay the two hundred dollars to the individual writing me the best short letter on the discussion in the Cosmopolitan.

The two hundred dollar prize will be awarded according to my judgment or that of a committee that I may appoint. I shall award the prize for the best brief, logical statement, whether it come from an advocate or an opponent of prohibition—whether the writer sustains my side of the discussion in the Cosmopolitan or the Rev. Dr. Alison's side.

Letters written by those that have read my article in the Cosmopolitan may be addressed to me in care of Post-office Box 1,402, New York City. Yours very truly,

GUSTAVE PABST.

Mr. Pabst, in his article in the May issue of the Cosmopolitan Magazine, discusses with the Rev. Dr. Alison, General Secretary of the National Temperance Society, the question of temperance through self-control, or absolute prohibition—a question which interests the whole of America at present.

Mr. Pabst is pretty sure to stir up wide discusssion by offering to pay two hundred dollars to the individual writing him the best letter on the question that interests him.

We are informed that Mr. Pabst has already received many letters from clergymen—some of them taking his side of the discussion some siding against him.

Our readers, like other citizens, can compete for Mr. Pabst's two hundred dollars if they choose. We hope that one of them may win the prize.

What Mr. Pabst [illegible] especially is that peopl[illegible] article and that of Dr. Alison in the May Cosmopolitan, and then write him very briefly their own opinions as to the merits of the case. The great question is: Will men develop by cultivating their own will power, or is it wiser to impose prohibition AND COMPEL MEN to be temperate in spite of themselves?

Even those who do not care to compete for the $200 prize which Mr. Pabst offers will be interested in writing him, for it is a question upon which millions of citizens feel very strongly.

These are briefly some of the points that Mr. Pabst makes in his contention that mankind will be developed by self-control from within, rather than by coercion from without.

We must judge nations and men and their customs by the results that they achieve. The brewing and beer-drinking Egyptians were certainly substantial builders and successful men. Those pyramids erected mysteriously without the aid of modern engineering do not tell of a people lacking in will power.

Germany, Great Britain and our own country do not lag behind in the world's competition. Among Mohammedans, the Turks especially, we can study the effects of legal prohibition It seemed wise to their prophet to substitute an iron law for the human will. What figure do the Mohammedans cut in the world to-day?

Temperance is the habit of a strong man. Prohibition is the resort of a weak man or a sentimentalist—I mean, prohibition as imposed by a minority upon a majority. In the individual case total abstinence, when necessary, is to be honored. When a man realizes that he cannot control himself as a temperate man, all honor to him if he have the courage and the will to control himself by total abstinence. But small honor to him if that total abstinence be forced on him by others instead of growing out of his own will power.

The over-indulgence in a meat diet is more injurious perhaps than the effect produced by the excessive eating a vegetables; but I should oppose the effort of any vegetarian to compel the meat eaters to give up meat.

A very large majority of physicians of the highest class prescribe beer for patients in delicate health in need of building up, because they know its food value, its easy assimilation and its digestive qualities. Millions of men and women use it as a necessary adjunct to their daily diet. Hundreds of thousands of men employed in smelters, foundries, glass works and factories, where the laborer is subjected to high temperatures in plying his trade, find the use of beer necessary not only as a beverage to quench their thirst, but also to replace loss of tissue caused by excessive perspiration.

Readers must remember, however, that what Mr. Pabst demands in his competition is a statement based on a careful analysis of his argument and Dr. Alison's. And he will not consider in the awarding of the $200 prize any letters except those written by men or women that have read the articles in the Cosmopolitan Magazine. Address your letters to Gustave Pabst, Box 1,402, New York City.

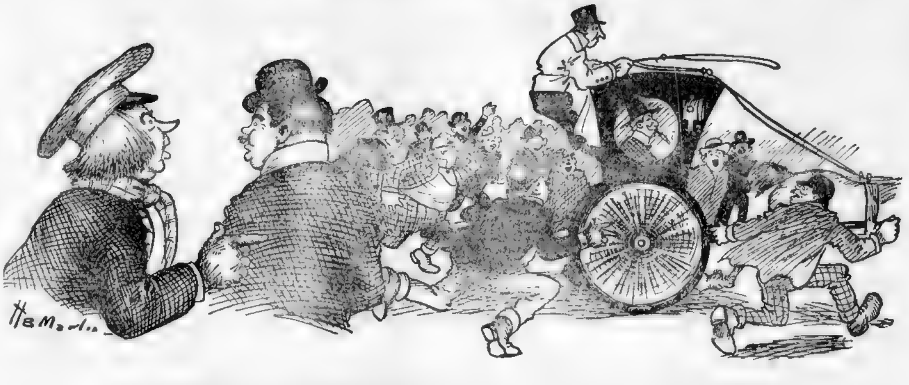
Swen Swenson Visits a Prince

by William F. Kirk.

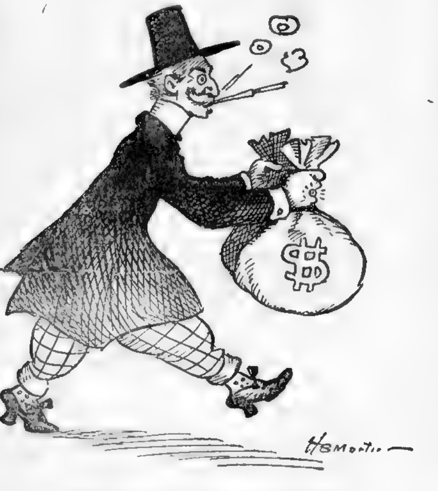
DEAR COUSIN OLE—Yust ven Ay ban going to write yu gude long letter bout politics and who ban going to run for next President of Union States, Ay happen to see faller riding in cab and lots of fallers running all round [illegible] cab and making planty noise. "Ay s'pose dis har ban runavay," Ay say, to geezer [illegible] "No," [illegible] "dis faller [illegible] ban prince faller; his name ban He[illegible] [illegible] over har [illegible] from France. Ay tenk [illegible] dese har yolly American [illegible] [illegible] Ay [illegible] Prince [illegible] Ay tenk [illegible] for a prince. So Ay go [illegible]

You see, Ole, Ay tenk ven Ay ban going to see dis har Prince he skol look lak Prince W[illegible] of Sveden. Ay always [illegible] right away, so [illegible] Prince Heeler in [illegible] Ay [illegible] Prince W[illegible] [illegible] Prince Heeler ban short. Ay tenk most of dese har French noble men ban short.

"Val, Prince," Ay say so sune as Ay ban in his room, "Ay s'pose yu lak America. Ay s'pose yu ban going to grab von of dese yolly American bank rolls," Ay say. Dis Prince Heeler look at [illegible] and ban vinking his oder eye. "Swen," he say, "don't yu ban worrying any about [illegible] sport. Ay ban taking a long yump from that dear Paris," he tal me, "and any time a French noble faller taking a long yump Ay bet yu he know var he ban going to land, becaus ve always look before ve ban yumping."



"'Ay s'pose dis har ban runavay,' Ay say to geezer standing on corner. 'No,' he say, 'dis faller in a cab ban prince faller.'"



"'Ready and villing to making gude play for big stakes.'"

You see, Ole, dese har American girls ant knowing how to get a yolly gude husband. Dey ant picking nice American faller and live in fine home in Newport, and dey ant marrying yolly gude Svede faller lak yu or me and settle down on nice farm in Nort Dakota. No, dey ban always picking out some prince vich yust came over, and Ay bet yu dey ban getting short end of marriage every time, Ay bet yure life. As poet faller say,

An American girl skol marry a prince,
And tenk he ban rich and brave and tall;
But he ban a shorter and uglier quince—
Into each life some rain must fall.

Val, Ole, Ay ban having gude long talk vith dis Prince Heeler. Ay find him a purty gude smart feller, tu. "Vat you ban tenking of New York?" Ay ask him "Ay don't know yet," he tal me. "Yust as sune as Ay ban hearing from Yeorge Gould Ay skol knowing more bout yure noble country," say Prince Heeler. "Ay ban a French noble," he tal me, "and Ay ant ever saying anyteng bout affairs of my heart or mention any lady's name, but you ban guessing my little secret," he say, "and feel lak asking lady vich ban going to be my bride, yust go and having gude talk vith her. French fallers ant never mentioning lady's name," he say, "but her initials ban Any Gold or someteng lak Any Gold Yu better go and asking her and find out vat she having to say."

"Over in Sveden," Ay tal him, "ven a prince faller lak to marry [illegible] girl and grabbing all the [illegible] he yust goes to father or brother of dis har girl and says 'Ay skol have [illegible] daughter.' Ay tenk dis ban a gude honest system," Ay tal him

"But yu ant a prince," say Prince Heeler "Yu ban only a common Svede roundhead, and yu ant got any of dese har finer feelings Yu never ban kicked downstairs," say Prince Heeler, "and so yu ant knowing vat yenuine sorrow means It ban bad enough to have loved and lost, he tal me, "but it ban awful to have loved and ban kicked downstairs. Dis har girl Ay ban courting," say Prince Heeler, "ban losing her old man long time ago, and yen yu ban talking to me about her brother Ay guess yu never ban meeting her brother Yeorge. Not for me, Swen Ay ban a prince, but Ay bet yu brother Yeorge ban a holy terror. Not for me, Swen"

"True love," Ay tal dis har Prince Heeler, "ban always laffing at locksmiths." "Ay s'pose so," say dis Prince Heeler, "but true love ant laffing at shoemakers, and Ay bet yu Ay ant going to ban kicked downstairs."

"Ay tenk yu ban having cold feet, Prince," Ay tal him. "Ef Ay love a girl, no power in heavens or under dis har earth skol keeping me from going and seeing her old man, or her brother, or whoever ban having most to say"

"Ay s'pose dis ban true," say Prince Heeler, "but yu must remember, Swen, as Ay say before, yu ban of common peepul, vich ban satisfied to get married and vork hard for yure vife and family. Ay s'pose some day," Prince Heeler tal me, "yu skol marrying nice fat Svede servant and spending yure days sumvare op in Nortvest, yumping around vith dese har treshing crews or being lumberyack in Vinter time op in pine voods. But Ay ban a true French noble," he say, "lak Cousin Boni and all the rest of dese har French geezers, ready and villing to making gude play for big stakes, but always shy in the yackpot before the draw," say Prince Heeler

"Val, Prince," Ay say to dis Heeler faller, "A s'pose before Ay go yu skol send down stairs for little drenk and treating yure frend from Sveden" "Ay tal yu, Swen," say Prince Heeler, "vy don't yu send down yuresalf? Ve Frenchmen," he say, "never lak to talking but affairs of the heart or the bar. Yu send down and ask the bar feller, and if he says it ban O. K. Ay skol be satisfied," say Prince Heeler.

So Ay go to telephone in Prince's room and telephone to cafe and say: "Hellow, Maester Bar Man, is Maester Prince Heeler gude for a drenk for two fallers?" "Is he married?" say bar faller. O. H. STILLMAN

MR. O. H. STILLMAN, president of the American Humane Society, of Albany, N. Y., has forwarded me an interesting letter. It is from a poor woman living in Lynn, Mass. The letter reads as f[illegible]

"An article in the American in regard to the cruelty shown children and animals has aroused my feelings and made my heart ache. I love animals and children; I am not a wealthy woman; I have to work for a living; but the American said that small sums would be accepted by the Humane Association to help in this educational work. So I wish to add my mite, and perhaps in the future I may be able to send more I do hope everybody will respond, until these cruel things can be stopped."

The writer incloses a postal order for $2 In a personal letter M. Stillman says "I would much rather receive that $2, with the intensity of kindly feeling back of it, than many a larger sum which comes to me with indifference." Mr. Stillman probably realizes the psychic truth regarding money gifts, and knows that what goes from the heart of the sender does far more good to a cause than what goes merely from the purse.

It would be a wonderful thing for the world could the rich men of America—the thousands of rich men of whom the world never hears—be awakened to the need of their interest in the work of this American Humane Society.

The New York City Humane Society, at No. 126 Fulton street, New York, is also deserving of the support of rich men and women. Look into its work and find out for yourself what it is doing. The work of these societies is not, as many suppose, merely to give protection to homeless animals.

It is a wonderful work of education for men, women and children. And how terribly this work is needed we have only to read the daily news column to know

Not many months ago a poor, demented man conceived the idea that the Goddess of Liberty on Bedloe's Island was menacing his life. Muttering and talking wildly, he went forth into the streets of our great metropolis—our greatest American city, whose innumerable church spires pierce the heavens, and whose "free schools" are the boast of the land.

Yet this wretched, sick man, needing the greatest sympathy and pity and care, was followed through the streets and teased and tormented by unthinking crowds of boys and men, until in frenzy he killed a watchman who stood in his path

This murder was directly caused by cruelty of the boys and men who tort[illegible] poor, unbalanced being, and drove him [illegible] frenzy of fear.

It is the work of the humane societies to educate boys and men and the mothers of men so that they will not torture one another or the helpless animals of earth.

Life in our large cities, in our country places, in our smaller towns, is made wretched for the deformed people, the beggars, the demented, the homeless animals, by the lack of kindness, consideration and thoughtfulness of those who are able bodied, of sound mind and possessed of homes. The most needed work on earth is the work these humane associations are doing in awakening the hearts of these classes of unthinking offenders. Every dollar given them is well expended.

But before giving them money send them postage to forward literature, which will explain to you just what they are doing, and for what purpose the money they receive will be expended.

Then, when you are convinced of the worthy object of these societies, set yourself to work to help enlarge their scope.

If you are a club man, try and give a bridge whist game some evening, the proceeds to be turned over to the Humane Sovciety. If you are a club woman, see if you can interest the women in your club to give an entertainment for this purpose. If you are a humanitarian, at least send your postage stamp and educate yourself on the work of the society.

It is better than all you can do for churches or foreign missions, for the field of these societies is larger and its purpose more universally religious than that of any church.

In a recent visit to the Hawaiian Island[illegible] read and studied the wo[illegible] of foreign missi[illegible] besides talking with m[illegible] [illegible] the Orient. That some of the work done by these missions is the little leaven which is helping to "leaven the whole" is indisputable. The medical phase of missionary labor in the Orient is the most important, since it is teaching cleanliness to those whose misfortunes hace come mainly through filth.

All the horrible diseases and plagues which have ever afflicted the warld originate in uncleanliness. Not only the people in tropical lands are the sufferers from their own slothful habits, but the whole world is menaced unless civilization carries the battle against filth into the very citadels of the offenders.

The enormous expenditure, however, of our American foreign missionary societies seems hardly balanced by the work accomplished.

One missionary who had lived twenty years in the interior of China in a city of 500,000 inhabitants seemed to think he had achieved wonders in converting 250 Chinese people to Christianity. I asked if his work included an effort to clean up the city, which has no sewerage and only dogs for scavengers. He said. "No; it is, of course, our object first to give them the light of the Gospel, and after that comes they can be taught cleanliness."

When we consider what it has cost to help this one branch of the American mission wor[illegible] in this one place, for twenty years, for such results, it seems sad to think of any shortage in the funds of the American humane societies, whose work is vastly more important to the elevation of the human race.

B[illegible]t in your own town, reader, is a cr[illegible] [illegible] of missionary work—the true mis[illegible] [illegible]k of making human beings kind [illegible] [illegible] and to dependents, whether brut[illegible]

SLINGS AND ARROWS by James J. Montague

The Chase of the Pole.

(The North Pole is shifting.—News Item.

Through the tortuous seas where the ice mountains roll,
And the cold is so cold that some people declare
It often has frozen big chunks of the air.

After years of privation and trouble and work,
After shooting the bears that in ice caverns lurk,
After walloping walruses, slaughtering seals,
And eating fried whale at their three daily meals,
Explorer and men were convulsed with delight,
For three points to leeward the Pole hove in sight.

It loomed in midocean, all plain to the view,
And wild was the joy of the captain and crew
When, with full steam ahead, they pressed hurriedly toward
The place where they saw it, to haul it aboard—
To haul it aboard and to hurry it home,
To nail it with pride on the Capitol's dome.

But just as the vessel was putting about
The lookout gave vent to a wondering shout:
"Avast, there!" he thundered, "and also belay,
The blooming old Pole has gone cruising away!"

Sure enough, as they stood there, amazed on the bow,
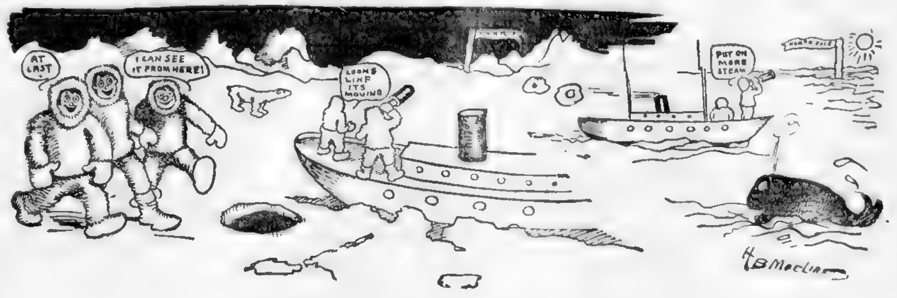
And proceeded to distance the ice-covered ship
By scudding away at a thirty-knot clip.
Full grim the explorer set sternly his face.
"Come on, she can't lose us," he quoth, "we'll give chase."

For days and for nights, through the circling degrees,
Past cape and past headland, through many strange seas,
They followed it hard, but it easily led
The ship every morning three cables ahead,
Till at last, all despairing of fortune and fame,
They gave the thing up and reviled its fool name

Which is why, the world learned a month or two later,
That the Pole was discovered down on the equator.



"Explorer and men were convulsed with delight, for three points to leeward the Pole hove in sight."

Hopeless.

I'd like to like the tangled tales that Henry James indites;
I'd like to like the operas that Mr. Wagner writes;
I'd like to like the pictures built of screaming reds and blues,
That Mr. Turner used to mix with other boisterous hues;
I'd like to like the cultured life, and be a lofty brow;
I'd like to have some intellect, but I just can't, somehow.

I'd like to like to save my cash unto the utmost cent,
And always keep ten times as much at interest as I spent;
I'd like to like financial life, and bend all thoughts and dreams
Toward getting rich by various and profitable schemes;
I'd really like to like to work, for if I did by now
Perhaps I'd have my fortune made, but I just can't, somehow.
I'd like to like to hang around the place where I reside,
And never stray one moment from my own bright fireside;
I'd like to like plain, simple tastes, so I might satisfy
My wants with things for which I had the wherewithal to buy;
I'd like to like a lot of things, but you'll perhaps allow

The Despot.

Far out on the sea, where the hurricanes blow,
When Winter sweeps down from the North,
Where the mountainous waves are all crested like snow,
The sailors go voyaging forth.
They brave the grim perils that wait on the deep
They laugh at the threatening foam,
They thread the dread channels where wild billows leap,
And all for a baby at home.

Far down in the mine, where the sun never beams,
The miners toil all the day through,
Lit only by torches whose feeble light streams
On faces of unearthly hue,
The rhythmical sound of the slow swinging pick
Fills many a cavernous dome,
While souls faint and fail, and hearts droop and grow sick,
And all for the baby at home.

Lives of a Great Man.

By Jacob A. Riis

At seven he was a beautiful, happy boy. At ten he read and spoke fluently Chinook, Syriac, Hindustani, Arabic, Hottentot and many other tongues, and knew the history of the world by heart. At twelve he was a far greater orator than Demosthenes and at fourteen he had Pericles, considered as a statesman, looking like P. H. McCarren. At eighteen he knew all there was to know, and at twenty he was ready to become the Emperor of the world

By Dr. W. J. Long

As a boy he probably fought chickens, although he couldn't have watched them very closely at that, or he would have known something about ornithology. While growing up he took a keen delight in setting traps for chewinks, putting out bird lime for robins and catching trout with a seine, although he never took the trouble to observe any of the habits of these creatures

At his majority he went out to South Dakota among the buffalos and coyotes, but was apparently very near-sighted during his sojourn, judging by what he doesn't know about them.

From twenty-one to the present time he has spent eighteen hours a day learning what little he knew about animals in his youth

By the Average Magazine Writer.

He is very commonplace. He is truly marvellous. There is nothing out of the ordinary about him, although he is a very extraordinary man. He knows very little about any given subject, although he is wonderfully well informed about almost everything. He writes with astounding inaccuracy, although there is almost absolute truth in every word he utters. He is entirely truthful, albeit he is most indirect, evasive and prone to tergiversation. He is determined to be President for a third time, but he will probably not accept the nomination if it is offered to him. Altogether, he is a most able, unintelligent, sapient, incompetent, complex, simple person, who either will or will not thunder down the corridors of time.

The Profession of Being A Woman—by Dorothy Dix

"Cleopatra has always been criticized for her lack of domestic quality."

THE profession of being a woman is farther complicated by necessitating that the individual who practices it successfully shall be a jack-of-all-trades.

Nobody demands that a man's nature should be ambidextrous, as it were. Nobody expects him to plough with one hand and lead a cotillon with the other. Nobody looks to find all sorts of contradictory charms and virtues in his nature, but with a woman these miracles are taken as a matter of course, and if she can't perform them she has to go away back and sit down among the members of the Down and Out Club.

Just because she has hung out her shingle as a woman, without reference to the side lines of the professions of wifehood, motherhood, daughterhood, etc., etc., we demand attributes that call for universal genius. It isn't enough that a girl is good, she must be pretty. It isn't enough that she is intelligent, she must be good and pretty. It isn't enough that she is domestic, she must be good, pretty, intelligent. It isn't enough that she is endowed with talent, she must be good, pretty, intelligent, domestic and amiable. It isn't enough that she is even a fascinator. We require of her that she be good, pretty, intelligent, domestic, amiable, talented and a thriller as well

Cleopatra has always been criticized for her lack of domestic quality; there have not been lacking those who have expressed the opinion that Joan of Arc couldn't have been a perfect lady, cavorting around as she did, instead of staying put in woman's sacred sphere, and while the world has occasionally condescended to admire the work of a woman of genius who was a little shy on bread making and short on stocking darning, it has always done so with reserves and a distinct proviso that, whatever she might have been as an artist, she was a rank also ran as a woman.

There is no more pathetic phase of woman's sad lot in the world than that she fails as a woman because it is impossible to do the impossible. It is because she tries to be, and is expected to be, at one and the same time, a fascinator and a household drudge; a fine lady and a cook; a literary woman and a nurse; an exponent of the fashion and her own dressmaker and milliner; a cheese paring economist and a good spender, that the average woman breaks down with nervous prostration, or gives up the fight, and becomes one of the great mass of jelly fish nonentities that don't try to do any thing because they can't do everything.

It's queer how much more is expected of a woman than there is of a man. Take, for example, the familiar case of the boy and girl in the same family who help to support their parents. The boy usually gets a larger salary, but if he contributes, say, half of it to the family support, everyone else in the household is down on his or her knees, calling down Heaven's blessing on the noble son and brother. Nobody dreams of taking the entire contents of his pay envelope away from him. He saves out part for his own amusement and personal uses. Nobody expects him to do a hand's turn of work upon his return home. On the contrary, he is petted and spoiled, the softest seat is for him, the tid-bit at the table, and his mother weeps with pride as she relates to the neighbors how good John is to her.

On the other hand, the daughter of a poor family has to turn over every cent she makes to mother, and mother hands her back the few dimes that she considers sufficient for the girl to spend upon herself. When the girl comes home from her work she has to lend a hand with the housework and help clean up after the brother who has worked no harder than she has. Nor do her parents throw fits of gratitude about how much she does to support and comfort their old age. They merely consider that she has done her duty.

For, you see, the unfortunate girl has been foolish enough to embrace the profession of being a woman, whose specifications call for filial devotion along with all the balance of the cardinal virtues.

Much more is also expected of a wife than of a husband. Popular opinion alone requires that a wife walk a straight chalk line, while the husband is permitted to do a deal of zigzagging. A wife's affection is presumed to stay always at the boiling point, no matter how old and tubby, and bald-headed, and tedious her husband gets, while no one is surprised when a man's ardent enthusiasm cools off when his wife develops avoirdupois and a tendency to meander all over the face of the earth when she tries to tell a story, or when she becomes hatchet faced and mother of vinegar-y

Likewise on the woman is laid the burden of making matrimony agreeable. It is the wife who must always meet her husband with a glad, sweet smile, no matter if she has spent the day nursing babies, and cooking and washing and scrubbing and ironing. It is the wife who must study up and read up on subjects of interest to her husband, so that she may make herself an agreeable companion to him. It is the wife who must spruce up and try to look young and beautiful, so that she may be pleasing in her husband's eyes.

Nobody knows why it isn't just as much up to the man to do the smiling act as it is to the woman, or why he shouldn't spend some time and effort of acquiring a line of talk in which she has a heartfelt interest, or why he shouldn't as well jump into his evening clothes to look good to her, as for her to don a dinner gown for his benefit. No one can reason about these things, for there is no logic in domesticity. Things merely are, and, without knowing how or why, an ability to be a professional entertainer on the hearthstone has become one of the side lines of the profession of being a woman and a wife

In practical affairs the versatility of talent that is required to be a successful woman is amazing. Just an ordinary woman, with no medals or diplomas, or pay, or anything, has to turn off a pretty good average job of nearly every calling under the sun

She has to be an amateur carpenter, and plumber, and gas fitter, and machinist who can take a hairpin and a tack hammer and do wonders beyond the imagination of man in the repairing line

She has to be a house decorator, an upholsterer, a painter who can make old things look almost as good as new

She must be a purchasing agent up to snuff in the prices of dry goods, furniture, groceries, meats and every article of family consumption

She must be a fine cook, a good housemaid, a model nurse, and a competent seamstress.

She must be a doctor capable of treating simple ailments; a sick nurse whose discretion and intelligence may be relied upon; a surgeon who can kiss a wound and make it well, and a bacteriologist forever tracking microbes to their lairs

She must be a judge who holds the scales of justice with an unfaltering hand between her children, and who knows when to mete out punishment and when to show mercy

She must be a theologian little feet the road to Heaven, for all the preaching of future years is but as sounding brass and tinking cymbals beside the prayers that a child learns to lisp at its mother's knee.

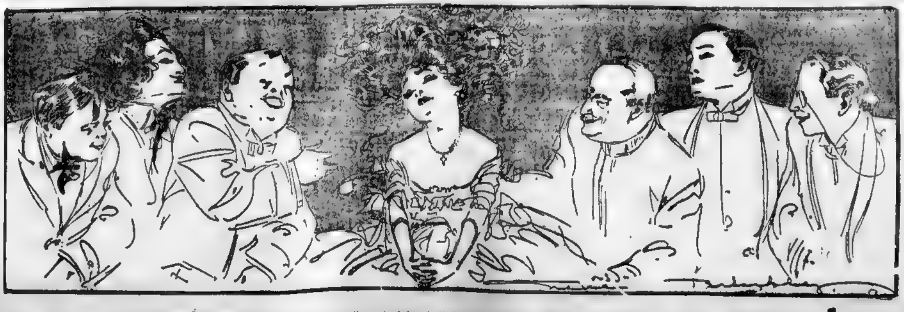
"Joan of Arc couldn't have been a perfect lady, cavorting around as she did."

She must be a diplomat who rules her kingdom with an iron hand in a velvet glove, who knows how to lubricate the creaking domestic machinery with the salve of the jolly, and to coerce husband and children into thinking they do of their own accord the thing that they ought to do and said they never would do.

She must be a financier who can make a dollar do the work of five, and on a beer income keep up a champagne display.

All of these trades must a woman be master of, just to be considered a plain, ordinary, not remarkable, every-day sort of woman. Without any one of them she is a failure. With them all she barely passes muster as a success, so complicated is the art of being a woman.

It's a great profession—that of being a woman—but it cannot conscientiously be recommended to any young person seeking an easy job, with short hours and good pay.



"Popular opinion alone requires that a wife walk a straight chalk line, while the husband is permitted to do a deal of zigzagging."

M'NEIL KNOWS ABOUT EVERYBODY

Neil McNeil, who will [illegible] treasurer in the "1908 [illegible]" when it is produced by the [illegible] Musical Comedy Company at the [illegible] Theatre a week from tomorrow, has [illegible] claims to distinction than [illegible] have fallen to him as a comedian. He is a brother-in-law of A. S. [illegible] manager of the Taft campaign, and a cousin of R. F. Outcault, the artist, whose Buster Brown pictures are a feature of the Sunday American comic supplement.

Mr. McNeil comes from Lancaster, O., which for a town of 15,000 inhabitants is doing very well in the way of producing famous men. Both Phil Sheridan and General Sherman came from the town, and the Sherman home was next door to the McNeil's. Roy Knabenshue, the airship man, is another native of Lancaster and a great friend of McNeil's. James Jeffries lived in Carroll, O., which is just next door to Lancaster. Mr. McNeil declares that he knew Jeffries well as a boy, but admits that he was fortunate enough never to get into a fistic encounter in the days of his youth.

Mr. McNeil has not appeared in Boston for three years. In the interim he has been the leading comedian of "The Land of Nod" and "Simple Simon Simple." He comes of a family that has always been more or less associated with the [illegible] [illegible] owns the theatre at [illegible]

Theatre Premier

One of the greatest achievements of modern times in the motion picture world will be exhibited at the Theatre Premier beginning tomorrow, the subject being Edison's masterpiece, "The Tale the Autumn Leaves Told," a story of the olden times in merry England. Beautiful scenes are shown, [illegible] the trysting place, the duel, the [illegible] the tower and the Gretna Green marriage. In addition to the above feature a fine bill of other motion pictures, including comedy subjects and new [illegible], will be rendered. To-night a concert will be given under the auspices of the Roxbury Ladies' Fuel Association.

Sunday Concert Bills

PALACE—Belmont and Brennan, the Alvarete trio, Ward and [illegible], the Watsons, McKeever and Sandry, Russell and Russell, Howard and Colby, and the Palacescope.

ORPHEUM—Charles Leonard Fletcher, "Six Little Girls and a Teddy Bear" with Everett Scott, Coin's Dogs, Edna Phillips and company, Hassan Ben Ali's Toozoonin Arabs, Reiff Brothers, Grace Leonard, Newhold and Carroll and the Kinetograph.

MAJESTIC—May Tully and Company in "Stop, Look and Listen," Conroy, La Mair and Company in "A King for a Night," Ziska and King, Trainor and Dale in "A Little Variety," [illegible] and De Haven [illegible], Agnes Scott and Company in "The Wall Between" and the Majesticope.

BOSTON—Bernard Golden, of "Old Jed Prouty" fame, in Clay M. Greene's playlet, "A Case of Divorce." The other artists are Irene Franklin, assisted by Burt Green, [illegible] Fields and Fred Ward, Duffin-Redcay Troupe, Melrose and Higgins, Dixie Serenaders and Martin Brothers.

GLOBE—Agnes Scott and Company in "The Wall Between," May Tully and Company in "Stop, Look and Listen," Conroy, La Mair and Company in "A King for a Night," Ziska & King, a team of very clever comedy magicians, Trainor & Dale, [illegible] and [illegible] knockabouts.

Short Stories of the Stage

Alice Lloyd will head the Easter week bill at Keith's, and among the features will be Charlotte Parry in her great protean playlet, "The Comstock Mystery."

[illegible] "The [illegible]" comes to the Grand Opera House [illegible]. This organization of fifty people is headed by that well-known comedian, S. H. Dudley, and includes the greatest colored artists in the world.

"Under Southern Skies" is the only play of Southern life ever written that does not bring in either a [illegible] "moonshiner" or a [illegible]. It is purely southern in character and atmosphere.

When Mrs. Fiske acts "Rosmersholm" at the Majestic tomorrow night she will have no incidental music or entr'acte music. This practice, which has long obtained at many of the European theatres, was first regularly followed by Mrs. Fiske in this country. It is generally recognized that for dramatic [illegible] the harmony of the performance is impaired by the playing of [illegible] music between the acts.

Three entirely different programs will be offered by [illegible] Harris, [illegible] English entertainer, when [illegible] Jordan Hall for his farewell engagement the last week in April. They will consist of humorous sketches, pianoforte solos and character impersonations among several of Mr. Harris's [illegible] season.

An Edison Triumph in Motion Picture Art

"The Tale the Autumn Leaves Told"

A Story of the Olden Times in Merry England.

SIR VARNEY OF LONDON TOWN—Her father, Lord Ravenhood, has pledged her hand to Sir Varney. He is rather distasteful to the Lady.

THE TRYSTING PLACE—The young lovers secretly meet. Plan their future. Her father and Sir Varney discover them—A quarrel ensues—Mistress Dorothy sent away in tears. Varney challenges the Squire to a duel.

THE DUEL AT EARLY DAWN—The ground is paced off—All is ready—The opponents fire—Mistress Dorothy arrives to save the lover's life—She is wounded instead.

IN THE GARDEN—The Lady recovering from the accident. Entertaining some friends. Giles, disguised as a peddler, brings a message from his master—Lord Ravenhood discovers the subterfuge—Imprisons Mistress Dorothy in the tower.

LOVE'S MESSENGER—Giles brings the news to his master. Squire Douglass. He pens a note to his Lady love—Ties the missive to a dove—The message delivered—Mistress Dorothy returns an autumn leaf as a love token.

THE TOWER—The lovers plan to escape—The Lady unravels her gown—Lowers the thread to her waiting lover. A rope pulled up. She escapes.

THE GRETNA GREEN MARRIAGE—The lovers escape on horses—Discovered by Lord Ravenhood—The runaways cross the boundary into Scotland—Stop at the shop of a blacksmith—Wedded and forgiven by Lord Ravenhood.

ROSIE LLOYD

Youngest of the Famous English Family of Comediennes—The Coming Lloyd

This appearance at the Orpheum Monday will be the first outside of New York, where Miss Lloyd, since she made her debut several months ago, has been the vaudeville sensation. She has the voice, the manner, the Lloyd vivaciousness, and most important of all, THE SONGS. She introduced "When It's Moonlight on the Prairie," and all New York is singing it. She has a dozen others just as good. Miss Lloyd appears at the Orpheum one week only. She will be a feature of one of the strongest bills of the season. The dramatic feature is Clay M. Green's sketch "For Love's Sweet Sake," with that sterling legitimate actor in the leading part, and supported by Thomas H. Ince. This will hold your attention. Next comes musical comedy on an even grandor scale—Tim McMahon and Edythe Chappelle with their big company of Pullman Porter Maids. Here's life, melody and graceful steps, in realistic, beautiful stage settings, and if you've never heard Tim McMahon tell "Why Hubby Missed the Train," you owe it to yourself to get to the Orpheum on time some afternoon or evening this week. We will have with us another old favorite, Gus Williams, the dean of all German comedians, brighter, more up-to-date and as sparkling as ever. Also Chinko, the juggler, who is adding to the great reputation he made in London; Alsace and Lorraine, who entertain with many kinds of instruments; Minnie Kaufman, the most expert of the great Kaufman family of bicycle riders; Dick Lynch, who provokes continuous laughter with his burlesques on popular songs, and some A1 moving pictures. TEDDY-B AND TEDDY-G; THE BEAR DETECTIVES

WM. H. THOMPSON

XXII.—“Tom, Tom, the Piper's Son”

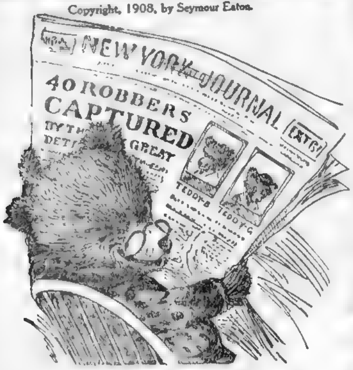
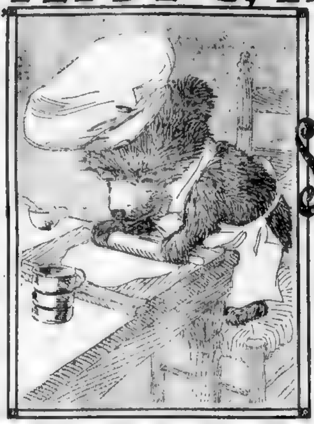
Copyright, 1908, by Seymour Eaton.



“The daily press from time to time.”

THE daily press, from time to time,
In making report of serious crime
To the Teddy Bears gave the credit due
For solving the mystery of Little Boy Blue;
For catching forty robbers brave,
And locking them up in the mountain cave;
For telling the Sindbad story right,
And proving it true by a skyward flight;
For dozens of things they did and said
To explain to children the things they read.
The news had spread o'er land and sea
Of how they solved each mystery,
And this is how a village lad,
A piper's son, and poorly clad,
Heard of the Bears and called one day
For an interview, and to ask if they
Would take five minutes to hear his tale
And show him how to keep out of jail.

'Twas their busy day, and TEDDY-B
Was out in the woods chopping down a tree,



“Rolling out dough with a rolling pin.”

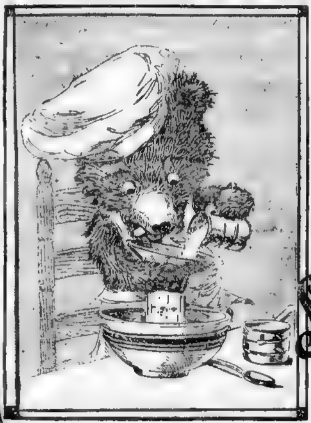
“The piper's son and Red Riding Hood.”



“And sifting flour from measuring cans.”

“And watching the fire with pots and pans.”

While TEDDY-G was employed within
Rolling out dough with a rolling pin,
And sifting flour from measuring cans,
And watching the fire with pots and pans,
And reading a book to learn the trade—
How potatoes are fried and cakes are made;
For TEDDY-B was the cook, you see,
And cooking was new to TEDDY-G.
He whistled a waltz as he rolled the cake,
And danced a jig when he turned the steak.
And sang a song as he made the tea,
And looked at the clock—'twas half-past three—
And said to himself, “I'll be ready at four,”
When he heard a knock at the cottage door.
He called, “Come in;” and before him stood
The piper's son and Red Riding Hood.

Red Riding Hood, in her usual way,
Was full of mischief and talk and play,
And began at once to make sport and fun.
She said the steak was underdone
And the oven cold, and the potatoes raw,
And the cakes the queerest she ever saw;
But TEDDY-G just laughed and said
That when he got rich a cook he'd wed,
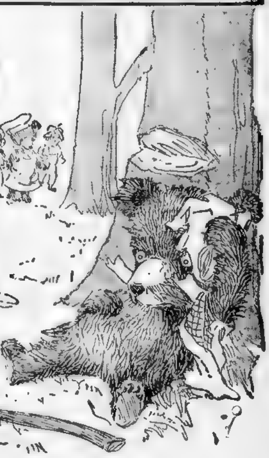
And cook for him six meals a day,
“But for the present, we must,” said he,
“Cook our own cakes and make our tea,
And, to tell the truth, we enjoy the fun
And the food we cook when our work is done;
But tell me, please, who is this lad,
And why so frightened and poorly clad?”

“This is To[illegible]om, the piper's son;
He stole a p[illegible] away he run;



“All three went out to TEDDY-B.”

At least, that's what his enemies say,
And I have brought him here to-day
To tell his story and to ask if you
Will attend the trial and help him through,
When the case is called there'll be some sport,
For the judge has ordered the pig in court,”
Then Red Riding Hood turned to the lad
And asked him not to look so sad
For she was sure, when the case was tried,
The Teddy Bears would take his side.

All three went out to TEDDY-B
To go over the case and to ask if he Would favor Tom and his lawyer be.
TEDDY-B said “Yes” when he heard the way
The pig had followed Tom that day,
“You leave the case to me,” he said,
“I've been at trials and law have read;
I'll do my best at Court you'll see,
To-morrow morning to get you free.”

The World's Debt to the Mothers of Men Who Made History

THE MOTHER OF WELLINGTON

By Rev. Thomas B. Gregory

THE conqueror of Napoleon! "Glory enough," you say, "for any man." And so has said the world.

Arthur Wellesley and Napoleon Bonaparte were born the same year—1769—the former on May 1, the latter on August 15. "Providence gave us this counterpoise," exultantly exclaimed Louis XVIII.

As was the case with Napoleon and many other illustrious men, Wellington inherited his most striking gifts from the maternal parent.

The father of Wellington—Garret Wesley, as the family name at that time went, though it was changed later to Wellesley—was a man of rather inferior parts, with the single exception of considerable skill in music, of which he seemed to be exceedingly fond.

That accomplishment it was that made him popular with George III., who in 1760 made him Earl of Mornington.

Thanks to the earldom, Garret Wesley was enabled to "look up" socially, and to hope for the matrimonial prospects which would otherwise have been quite out of the question.

Woman of Strong Will

LADY MORNINGTON would have been a Semiramis or a Boadicea had she lived a thousand years earlier, her strength of mind and determination of will being remarkable.

Left a widow in 1781, she took hold of her newly imposed duties in a way to show that it was both natural and easy for her to rule.

She was of an imperious nature, with but little of the sunny or the genial in her makeup. In temperament she was stern and cold, repelling rather than attracting the people with whom she had to deal.

Everybody respected Lady Mornington, but nobody loved her. The sentiment of affection she was never able to inspire. It would have been as easy to "warm up" to a cake of ice as to Her Ladyship.

She had no premonition of what her son Arthur was to be in the world. In her eyes the lad was stupid, without a single sign of promise. "I vow to God," she declared one day, "I know not what to do with him."

By and by, when Arthur expressed the wish to join the army, she said: "All right! You may as well be food for powder as come to some other end."

Not Affectionate

BETWEEN the mother and the son there was very little genuine sympathy. Without any visible friction, there was a manifest lack of the hearty affection that we naturally expect to find between mother and child.

In a word, Wellington's boyhood was anything but a happy one.

And yet, cold and haughty as Lady Mornington was, she was not altogether destitute of the motherly attributes. She fondled her children but little, if at all, but she took care to instil into their minds her own high sense of integrity and honor and, we must not forget to add, her own indomitable resolution of purpose.

Early and late she taught them to be determined in whatever they undertook and to be honorable in all their dealings.

To know Wellington is to know that he was his mother's almost exact duplicate.

With perfect propriety was he called the "Iron Duke." He was [illegible] as the metal he was named after, [illegible] hard and cold as the mother that [illegible] him.

Trusted, Not Loved

NO soldier's heart ever enthused over Wellington. Soldiers fight sometimes out of the spirit of a personal attachment to their commander, sometimes out of a grim sense of duty.

Wellington's soldiers fought gloriously, but it was not because [illegible] the personality of their general. They had faith in his ability and integrity, and therefore cheerfully obeyed him, but they could not love him.

But the "Iron Duke" was every inch a man. He did not know how to throw his arms about a comrade's neck and make him love him, but he did know how to make every one trust in him as an absolutely square and honorable man.

Wellington's honor was as staunch as a heart of oak, and when he made a promise it was never his fault if he did not carry it out.

His word was as good as a Bank of England note, and all who knew him were prepared to trust him to the ends of the earth.

In fine, he was his mother over again—cold, reserved, imperious, of unconquerable resolution, but perfectly just and of incorruptible integrity.

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN

By Beatrice Fairfax

UNMANLY CONDUCT

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I have been engaged to a young man whom I love very much and who assured me when I became engaged to him that he loved me as well. A few weeks ago he asked me to release him from the engagement, giving the reason that he did not love me as well as [illegible] and that I was too good for him. I told him no girl was too good for the man she loved, if he loved her, and I [illegible] influence him in [illegible] or wrong. But as I do not desire to marry any man who does not love me, I released him, asking him to [illegible] my letters and photograph. This he did not want to do, but [illegible] to keep them in remembrance of me, as he would not see me any more [illegible] was to [illegible] the part of [illegible]. I therefore let him keep them. He wished very much that we should still be friends and assured me that he loved no other girl. About a week ago I heard he had been showing my letters to his gentlemen friends. Of course, if this is true, I cannot recognize him, but I am in doubt about the truth of it. I may wrong him if I refuse to recognize him. E. M. M.

WRITE and tell him that you feel that you must ask him to return your letters, and let him see that you mean what you say. If he refuses to there is nothing you can do, but surely he cannot be such a cad as to read a girl's letters to his men friends. I do not see that you can be on friendly terms with him. Bow to him when you meet, but discourage any attempt at conversation on his part.

SHOULD NOT OBJECT

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young man, nineteen years of age. About two weeks ago while at a ball I made the acquaintance of a young lady. It was a case of love at first sight, that is, on my part. She is two years my senior. I am not thinking about getting married at the present time, as I do not know her long enough. Now, what I want to find out is if you think she will have any objections to my company when she finds out my age? As much as I can say is that she likes me. D. A. D.

NO, I see no reason why she should object to being friendly with you. Of course, you are too young to think of getting married, but you say you are not thinking of that.

MUCH TOO YOUNG

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young man eighteen years old, and earning $15 a week. I am in love with a young lady twenty years of age. I have called at her house a few evenings, but her mother seems to object to my coming. Please advise me what to do, as I love her very much. W. W.

HER mother probably considers you too young to know your mind on anything so important. You see, the girl is old enough to marry, but you are not, and her mother feels that she is wasting her time.

NOT MUCH FRIENDSHIP

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am nineteen years old, and for the last two years have been going with a young lady of the same age. We have had frequent quarrels and she always seems willing to make up first, and [illegible] friends tell me, she "runs after me." She has always treated me very nicely, but when I am going with her she seems to bore me very much and I get very tired of her, and am always glad to break the friendship, and when we are apart I seem to long for her. JACK.

YOU do not speak in very gallant terms of her, and I think for her sake it is much better that the friendship cease. If she loves you you cannot care for her at all. I am sure she would not care to renew the friendship if she knew how you felt.

A SURGICAL OPERATION

If there is any one thing that a woman dreads more than another it is a surgical operation.

We can state without fear of a contradiction that there are hundreds, yes, thousands, of operations performed upon women in our hospitals which are entirely unnecessary and many have been avoided by

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND

For proof of this statement read the following letters.

Mrs. Barbara Base, of Kingman, Kansas, writes to Mrs. Pinkham:

"For eight years I suffered from the most severe form of female troubles and was told that an operation was my only hope of recovery. I wrote Mrs. Pinkham for advice, and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it has saved my life and made me a well woman."

Mrs. Arthur R. House, of Church Road, Moorestown, N. J., writes:

"I feel it is my duty to let people know what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I suffered from female troubles, and last March my physician decided that an operation was necessary. My husband objected, and urged me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and to-day I am well and strong."

FACTS FOR SICK WOMEN.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, and backache.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health. Address, Lynn, Mass.

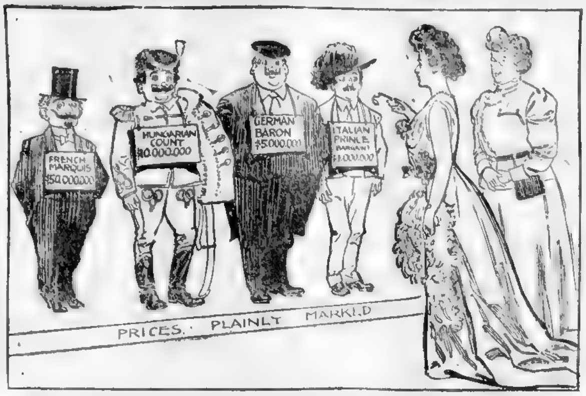
BARGAIN DAY IN TITLES

"Few Foreigners Seek American Wives Unless They Need Money"—Beatrice Fairfax



FRENCH MARQUIS $50,000,000
HUNGARIAN COUNT $10,000,000
GERMAN BARON $5,000,000
ITALIAN PRINCE BARGAIN! $1,000,000
PRICES. PLAINLY MARKED

THE MATRIMONIAL MARKET, IN WHICH THE BUYER IS ALWAYS SOLD

SORROW the day for the American girl when she started bargain-hunting for titles!

That is all that most of this exchange of American beauty and American gold for foreign titles amounts to—a mere bargain. The foreign count or petty prince buys a wife and a dowry with his title.

The American girl exchanges her beautiful self and her father's millions for a title.

It is a bargain sale where the poor American girl purchaser often knows too little of the goods she acquires and where she is more often than not imposed upon by mere shoddy material.

It is an accepted fact among the better class of people abroad that their impoverished men of title seldom if ever seek American wives unless they need money.

And, when they do need money and decide to pursue the wealthy American bride, they do it with an unblushing directness and with a bold eye to the money that should warn the most inexperienced girl.

Present day developments among international marriages are replete with unfortunate examples of the bargain-title mistakes.

The American bride takes herself and her wealth across the water to her husband's estate, gives her money to him to pay his debts and squander in the ways to which he is accustomed. She finds herself neglected by her husband, despised by his relatives and the object of harsh comment by his people.

Query—If some of these money-hunting noblemen are so fascinated by the American girl for herself alone, why don't they come over here incognito and, as plain, cultivated gentlemen, win the girl's heart first and mention their title afterwards?

But they won't do this, these men of bargain titles. For they know the title is their main chance and that, as ordinary men, they wouldn't be accepted at any price—not even at a matrimonial bargain sale.

MONDAY'S BEST BARGAINS IN BOSTON'S BIG STORES

MONDAY AT [illegible] you will find a special bargain in a [illegible] length real French kid glove. A lot of these gloves will be placed on sale for one day at $1.62 a pair. This is an unusual offer at this price, as they are the regular $3 value, made of best quality kid, and are all new Spring goods. All sizes in black and white may be found in the lot.

THE DAINTIEST LITTLE GUIMPE waists for girls from four years to twelve years have been reduced from $2 and will be put on sale at James A. Houston's Monday for 97 cents. These guimpes are made of fine lawns, with front and backs of fine tucking and dainty laces, and are just the thing to wear with the new guimpe or jumper dresses. As there are only thirty-seven in the lot it would be well to shop early.

THE CONTINENTAL CLOTHING House, on Washington street, will offer a lot of boys' suits, made of high grade blue serge, in double-breasted style, with knickerbockers, [illegible] for $4.65—former price $6.50. These are all new Spring suits, and will be on sale at this price just one day. They come in all sizes.

A VERY PRACTICAL BARGAIN CAN be had at Bailey's Rubber Store, on Boylston street, to-morrow. About one dozen misses' raincoats, that formerly sold for $5 and $7.50, will be reduced to $2.50. These coats come in [illegible] style, in smart grey mixtures, for girls from 8 to 14 years. At this season of the year these coats are exceptionally good [illegible] at this low price.

[illegible] WILL OFFER [illegible] about seventy-eight pairs of Princess corsets of two different styles ([illegible] and C20) for 79 cents a pair. These corsets are made of good quality coutil, [illegible] and ribbon trimmed and have strong hose supporters attached at front and sides. They are long hip models, with either high or medium bust, and come in sizes from 24 to 30. These are the regular $1.50 and $2 models, and will be found excellent values.

HENRY SIEGEL WILL PLACE ON sale a lot of fine batiste waists made in two different styles, reduced from $2.9[illegible] and $3.95, to sell special for $2.25. One style is made with fine tuckings across shoulders and panels of German val. and Oriental lace down front, lace trimmed back, collar and cuffs. The other style has a round yoke and panel down front of baby Irish, with body, back and sleeve elaborately trimmed with tucking and val. insertion. These are both very pretty models at this price.

A SEASONABLE BARGAIN FOR THE children may be had at A. [illegible]. A lot of straw hats in a variety of different styles that were sold for $1 up to $2.50 will be closed out at 75 cents each. There are Milan braid tams, Napoleons and Russian shapes; also an assortment of plaid straw rolling brim sailors.

AT CONRAD'S, MONDAY, will be sold a lot of their regular $2 and $2.50 wash dresses for $1.10. These little dresses are an odd lot of this Spring's latest models for girls from 5 years to 14 years, in various styles. In the lot will be found pretty ginghams, dimities and percales, trimmed with contrasting colors and made with deep-plaited skirts, buttoning from neck to hem.

IN THE SILVER DEPARTMENT OF R. H. White Company there will be placed on sale a special lot of Rogers "R. C." brand tablespoons, reduced from 25 cents to 10 cents each. These spoons are silver plated on white metal base and are warranted to wear five years. They come in a [illegible] pattern.

A BEAUTIFUL LOT OF TWO-INCH elastic belts will be on sale at Shepard Norwell's for $1.[illegible], formerly sold for $2 [illegible] $4. These belts are made of fine quality imported silk elastic and [illegible] studded with steel, and have beautiful riveted cut steel buckles, some having [illegible] back and front. In the lot will be found black, brown, grey, light blue and red.

J. G. SMALL WILL PLACE on sale Monday about four dozen soiled waists that formerly sold for prices from $2.98 up to $4. To close the lot out they will be marked to $1.25 each. This lot of waists includes various styles of batistes and fine lawns, [illegible] and lace trimmed; also a few [illegible] linens. Some very good values will be found in most any size.

GILCHRIST COMPANY WILL HAVE a special sale of ladies' separate coats, reduced from $10 and $15, to sell for $7.50. [illegible] various styles, made up in good quality covert cloth and black broadcloth, all satin lined throughout. These are all new Spring models and may be had in every size.

IF YOU WOULD LIKE TO purchase an inexpensive Spring suit, you will be able to get a bargain at Houghton & Dutton's to-morrow. A special lot of suits made Princess Chap style of all wool serge, striped Spring suitings in grays and browns will be placed on special sale for readers of the BOSTON AMERICAN. These suits are made with full plaited skirt with [illegible] and smart three-button cutaway coat with good quality Venetian lining. This suit is really worth $10, but will be sold Monday for $5. It may be had in either misses' or ladies' size.

THE GLEN SHIRT AND COLLAR Company on Tremont street has just received a new lot of men's 50-cent neckwear that will be offered for 35 cents each, or three ties for $1. These ties come in a beautiful assortment of plain and fancy colors, are made reversible and are good values.

AS A SPECIAL AT MacDONNELL'S Tremont Temple Store they will sell their eight row coronet hair puffs for $2.75, reduced from $5. These puffs promise to be exceptionally good on account of the large hats to be worn this Spring. There are all shades of brown in the lot, and they will be sold at this price on Tuesday only.

Fat All My Life.

First a captivating plumpness begins to steal upon a woman in her twenties. Plumpness is followed by—oh, horrors—fatness and shortness of breath and heart flutters. Then, alas, comes the chin that is double and the comical lumbering waddle of the overfat. Fine sarcasm to tell such a woman to exercise. Why not counsel flying? She is as able to do the one as the other. It's another keen cut to suggest dieting. When ladies are just so fat they haven't an ounce of will power or energy to spare for extras—just living is hard enough work for them.

What then? Are these unfortunates condemned to be fat for life? No, believe it or not; a simple home receipt, easy to get at a drug store, will take that fat off and keep it off. Listen! ½ ounce Marmola, ½ ounce Fluid Extract Cascara Aromatic and 3½ ounces Syrup Simplex mixed at home and taken in teaspoonful doses after meals and at bedtime, will take off as much as a pound a day in some cases. Get the Marmola in the sealed packages—you are sure it is fresh that way—take the mixture a month and you'll see. The fat seems to drop off and leave nice, smooth, firm flesh, while the health and complexion improve wonderfully. Marmola Co., Detroit, Mich.

Expert Advice on Health and Beauty

WALNUT STAIN

DEAR PROFESSOR:

Will you please repeat the walnut stain, as I [illegible]? I have a switch that I [illegible] with peroxide. It has turned it red [illegible] dark brown. [illegible] to get the switch the same color as my hair. J. L. K.

TAKE two ounces of green walnut skins, one-quarter ounce of alum, four ounces of pure oil. Heat together in a double boiler until the water has evaporated, then press out the juice. [illegible] perfume.

MAKE HAIR WAVE

DEAR PROFESSOR:

Can you tell of something that will make the hair wave? I am twenty-five years old and my hands are like a woman of sixty-five. Nothing I use seems to do any good at all. Can you tell me of anything? DAVENPORT.

DAMPEN the hair with a lotion made from quince seeds which have been soaked in water and the liquid strained off. Put it up in curlers, and when it is dry it will retain the curl. For the hands make yourself cosmetic mittens out of some old worn light woolen goods, line them with cotton flannel and coat them with mutton tallow and beeswax in equal parts, melting them onto the mittens with the aid of a warm iron. Wear these every night and as much during the day as possible. Cut off the ends of the mittens so that the air may circulate freely.

PEROXIDE AS BLEACH

DEAR PROFESSOR:

Will you please tell me in your beauty column how to use peroxide to whiten the skin, and how often to apply? Will it harm red cheeks? ANXIOUS.

YOU can use peroxide as a bleach pure, or you can dilute it with an equal quantity of water if the full strength is irritating. If it dries or irritates the skin too much use a good cold cream every night. This will keep the skin in fine condition. Apply it as often as you like.

ROYAL WORCESTER ADJUSTO CORSETS

FOR FIGURES VARYING FROM PLUMP TO OVER STOUT

The ADJUSTO is like all other Royal Worcester Corsets—skillfully designed to fashionably shape and support the figure—but has the added valuable feature, abdomen adjusting bands, which can be adjusted by the wearer without removing the corset.

By tightening these bands after the ADJUSTO is fitted to the form, the abdomen is lifted up, held in firmly and drawn towards the hips.

At the same time, superfluous flesh of hips and back is reduced, flattened and distributed equally, creating the very stylish flat hip effect.

The ADJUSTO is the most comfortable corset a woman can wear, because it fits smoothly at every point, moulds her form into right proportions, and makes her stand correctly.

The ADJUSTO will permanently retain its original shape, and is very serviceable, as it is made of durable materials, and reinforced with superior quality stays.

Ask your dealer to show you the ADJUSTO.

MINNIE MADDERN FISKE'S visits to Boston are a stimulus. She does not come often enough. At the Majestic this week she is to play Rebecca West in Ibsen's "Rosmersholm." While not a believer in the production of many of Ibsen's plays—regarding them as an unnecessary and revolting revelation of the baser elements of life—The Observer agrees with Mrs. Fiske when she says: "Ibsen makes an appeal to the actor's imagination, to his soul, to his brain. Some who write plays believe that in offering a merely disagreeable, immoral and depressing drama they have written after the manner of the Norwegian poet. But apart from this inevitable misfortune, his influence in the theatre has been of such stimulation as to change the character of dramatic literature in every country. 'Rosmersholm' is a tragedy, yet I see nothing depressing in its final moments. They are to me full of imaginative beauty and of exaltation."

There are many indications that a new burlesque "wheel" will shortly be formed, composed of secessionists from the present "wheels." Poor business, as the result of poor shows, on the Eastern wheel in particular, has caused much dissatisfaction. The local burlesque houses have had much better business than those in any other part of the country. Some of the burlesque shows seen here this season have been so bad that even the performers grew disgusted with them, and the audience frequently put on his hat and went out for a bracer.

ABOUT two years ago The Observer wrote a special story in this paper, extolling the work of Florence Kahn at the Castle Square, using such adjectives as "remarkable," "exceptional," "artistic." He recognized certain traits that reminded him of Mrs. Fiske and Mrs. Campbell, and styled her "a genius of an impelling order." The mails for a week contained letters (all, of course, anonymous), in which the writers called him everything from a "blithering idiot" to "a man of inverted judgment." But he lived through it. On Friday, in the New York Telegraph, was a cable dispatch from London, stating that "Florence Kahn had another London triumph on Tuesday, when she gave a piece of powerful acting in a new play by Alfred Sutro, entitled 'The Man on the Kerb.' It gave the audience a thrill worthy of the Grand Guignol Company. Seymour Hicks was the leading man." Another London triumph! Is a quiet, gentle chuckle up one's sleeve permissible?

A properly-working knee is quite essential to a chorus girl. Little Irene Berry, the talented girl whose abilities were spoken of in this column recently, when she was here in "The Wizard of Oz," has been forced to abandon her work because she tore a ligament in her knee while dancing for the benefit of the Toledo (O.) Press Club recently. She is now at her home in Malden. Miss Berry was made an honorary member of the club, and her photo is now hung in the club rooms, but she won't be able to dance for several months.

THE presence of "The Right of Way" in Boston is particularly interesting to Donald Meek, the character comedian at the Boston Theatre, for Mr. Meek came within the proverbial ace of creating the role of Joe Portugais. When Gilbert Parker's novel became the rage some years ago, the Frohmans conceived the idea of dramatising the novel, and they selected Mr. Faversham to create the part of Charley Steele and Mr. Meek for the difficult and strong part of Joe Portugais. In order to become familiar with the French Canadian dialect and the manners and customs of the habitant, Mr. Meek went to Quebec, and going into the country, spent the Summer with the family of a French-Canadian farmer, the family's knowledge of English being very limited. He remained there three months and returned to the States a veritable Jean Baptiste Trudeau. For some unexplainable cause the Frohmans abandoned the project.

THERE is a great event in store for playgoers when Mme. Nazimova, the Russian actress, comes to the Majestic on April 27 in "Hedda," "Doll's House," "The Comet" and "Comptesse Coquette." She played here in Russian two years ago, and those who saw her were amazed at her remarkable power. It was prophesied that, should she study English, she would set the country ablaze, and she has done so. She bids fair to be a second Bernhardt in her chosen line of dramatic work. It is said that she learned English perfectly in three months.

Staid old Boston certainly outdid herself in welcome to Mme. Cavalieria Friday night. When an audience remains after the final curtain to yell, applaud, stamp and cheer and makes a singer appear fourteen times in front of the curtain, it is "going some" in the way of appreciation. Mme. Cavalieria and Caruso certainly should feel proud of their greeting in "Manon Lescaut." Does it prove that Boston wants real grand opera? Chorus: "It does." By the way, Henry Russell says the new Grand Opera House here will be opened in November, 1909.

What the Theatres Offer

Majestic Theatre

To-morrow evening sees the return of Mrs. Fiske and her first performance here of "Rosmersholm." The engagement is to be for two weeks, with matinees on Saturdays only. The curtain rises at 8.15 in the evening and 2.15 at the matinees. The play has a story of great dramatic strength and is acclaimed as the best acted drama in the memory of present day playgoers. The three years of study Mrs. Fiske has given to the character of Rebecca West shows in the finished portrayal she gives of this remarkable woman. In the outbursts of pent up emotion during the inquisition by Kroll and the confession that follows it, Mrs Fiske, it is said, does the finest acting of her career. As to the rest of the company, it is like all organizations under Harrison Grey Fiske's direction, of a high standard of merit. It includes Bruce McRae, [illegible] Albert Bruning and Mary Maddern

Colonial Theatre

"The Parisian Model," a thing of spangles and tissues, will be seen at the Colonial Theatre for the fortnight beginning Monday evening. The success which it made at the Broadway Theatre, New York, where it ran throughout the entire season last year, and its sensational engagement at the Colonial earlier in the present season, is remembered. Anna Held is more chic than ever. It is a noisy, brilliant, dazzling and tuneful romp, all whirls of dance, melody and revolving pictures—a furious riot of thrilling surprises. A roller skating rink makes a splendid finale.

Castle Square Theatre

Messrs. Miller and Carruthers will present The Players for the week of April 13 in Langdon McCormick's new play, "Out of the Fold." This will be its first presentation in Boston. It ran for eight weeks in New York and all Summer in Chicago. "Out of the Fold" is [illegible] The theme of the third act is founded on these lines by Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

> "The woman repented and turned from sin,
> But no door opened to let her in;
> For this is the law of earth we know,
> That the woman is stoned while the man may go."

The cast will include Charles Miller, Fletcher Harvey, Edgar Baume, Ogden Stevens, Louis Albion, Francis Leonard, Carl Gerard, Mark Kent, Charles Beckste, Mabel Colcord, Lillian Paige, Gertrude Houdhill, Agnes Stone and Elfreda Lasche

Keith's Theatre

A program remarkable for its all-around strength is that arranged for this week. There is no livelier farce than "What Will Happen Next?" and it is played up to the handle by Wilfred Clarke and his company.

"A Night with the Poets" is one of the most artistic novelties vaudeville has ever known. Although Vasco, the mad musician, has been seen in Boston before, this will be his first engagement at Keith's. His stunt of playing upon some thirty different instruments is remarkable. The Three La Maze Brothers are unusually clever acrobatic comedians. Elsie Faye and Bissett and Miller make up "The Act Dainty," a swell singing and dancing turn. Original songs and some bright stories, sung and told at a piano, in other words, a pianologue—such is Sam Williams's offering. Ferreros and his trained dog and Alexander and Bertie in a novel aerial turn will complete the list.

Orpheum Theatre

Boston will have an opportunity to-morrow to welcome Rosie Lloyd, the second of the famous family of music hall singers to appear in Boston this season. Perhaps her most popular song is called "When It's Moonlight on the Prairie," which has been heard here already, but will be heard as originally sung by Miss Lloyd Monday afternoon at the Orpheum Theatre. The strong dramatic feature of the bill will be William H. Thompson and company, including Thomas H. Ince, in "For Love's Sweet Sake." Tim McMahon's Pullman Porter Maids, a company of ten attractive girls [illegible], will be the spectacular feature. Mr McMahon and Miss Chappelle also appear in their sketch, "Why Hubby Missed the Train." Others are Gus Williams, German comedian; Chinko, unique juggler; Alsace and Lorraine, musical act, Minnie Kaufman, bicycle rider, and Dick Lynch in his burlesque [illegible]

Boston Hippodrome

The third and last week but one of the Boston Hippodrome with Rogers's Indoor Circus and the Ballet of the Butterflies, at Mechanics Building, begins to-morrow afternoon. The attendance during the past [illegible] The reduction of prices [illegible] day week proved [illegible] feature that Manager Al. [illegible] has decided to continue it for one more week, and in order that no one may be disappointed he will increase the number of 50-cent seats from 2,000 to 3,000. There will also be 1,000 seats at 25 cents. Mr. Rogers desires that it should be clearly understood, however, that notwithstanding the reduction in prices the show will be exactly the same as it has been from the very beginning. Indeed, for the third week a number of new features are to be added to the program

Globe Theatre

One of the pleasing events of the season will be the return to Boston of "Under Southern Skies," which opens at the Globe to-morrow afternoon for a single week's engagement. It is now in its seventh year upon the road [illegible] reports give the play the credit [illegible] to even larger houses this year [illegible] before in its history. Every year [illegible] something new has been offered in the [illegible] celebration to give novelty from [illegible] season to season, and this year still [illegible] that policy. The arrangement of [illegible] es and the songs will be entirely different from those of last season. Also every bit of scenery used in the play is entirely new and new costumes have been provided.

Grand Opera House

A story dealing with waywardness, love, villainy, bribery, vengeance, repentence and retribution, exposing many of the inside workings of the crooked, all presented with faithful realism, is said to make "Kate Barton's Temptation," by Lillian Mortimer, the author-actress, stand out as one of the best of the high class melodramas of the season. Although the play, which comes to the Grand Opera House this week, is said to be of the most thrilling type, it is nevertheless free from the absurdities of the customary melodrama. Among the well known members are Miss Blanche Shirley and Miss Grace Covert. High class specialties will be interspersed. Matinees will be given Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday. Friday evening will be "hookless" amateur night.

Tremont Theatre

The thirteenth week of the stay of "The Man of the Hour" at the Tremont Theatre begins with Monday night's performance, which also marks the 100th time this greatly discussed comedy drama has been given in this city continuously by one company at the same theatre. This is a remarkable record, and to make it more notable and fix it more firmly in the mind of the theatre-going public, Messrs. Brady & Grismer and the Tremont Theatre management will present a handsome souvenir to every lady attending to-morrow evening's performance holding a reserved seat coupon. This souvenir will be a very pretty Swiss clock. There will be two performances on Patriots' Day.

Boston Theatre

This week the performances of Wilson Barrett's "The Sign of the Cross," which were interrupted by the opera season, will be resumed. Few plays that have been presented by the Boston Theatre stock company under Manager Morison's direction have so well proved the value of this organization and the completeness of its stage equipment. The lessons it enforces make it peculiarly suitable as an attraction for holy week and Manager Morison extends a cordial invitation to all clergymen who have not attended a performance of this drama to do so at their convenience this week.

Park Theatre

"I'm getting to be a habit in this town," is the way Patricia O'Brien sizes up her vogue in Boston, and judging by the size of the audiences at the Park since Rose Stahl made her first appearance here in James Forbes's comedy, "The Chorus Lady," the observation is correct. During the weeks of Miss Stahl's engagement the Park has been packed at every preformance. It is not too much to say that Miss Stahl has taken Boston by storm and that the Forbes play is proving one of the most appealing dramatic offerings that has been disclosed here in many seasons.

Hollis Street Theatre

Genuine enthusiasm marks each performance of Sir Gilbert Parker's "The Right of Way," which concludes its Boston engagement this week. "The Right of Way" is rich in dramatic elements. It is a psychological study of subtle and refined type. The love interest is beautiful and has much that is idyllic about it. Readers of the book will remember that Sir Gilbert left them with a great question unanswered. Mr. Presbrey's version solves the problem in that he shows that man's redemption comes through love and faith. Guy Standing and Theodore Roberts are especially featured as joint stars in the respective roles of Charley Steele and Joe Portugais. Others in the company include Alice Lonnon, late leading lady with E. S. Willard, May Buckley, Migson Beringer, Paula Gloy, Alexander Kearney and Henry Weaman

Bowdoin Square Theatre

One of the most popular of all English melodramas is "The Female Swindler." The story unfolds the life of a dangerous woman, Lu Valroy, whose chief aim in life is to follow a path of crime. She enters in many schemes to accomplish her ends, but her career is brought to a close when she tries to abduct pretty May Andrews, the heroine of the piece. Detective Jack Coulson plays a prominent part in this rescue and is also instrumental in uniting the lovers who have been temporarily separated by the Valroy woman and her confederates. The principal characters in the play will be taken by Charlotte Hunt, Arthur Maitland and Isabel Sherman. The vaudeville features which made such an impression will be continued with an entire change of bill.

Howard Athenaeum

If the wave of popularity for the sport of wrestling which has swept over the country has done nothing else, it has served to bring before the public finely developed types of humanity. At the Howard this week will be seen Cora Livingston, the champion female wrestler of the world, who will be assisted by four girls and two male assistants. They will go through genuine wrestling bouts. The burlesque part will be furnished by that top-notch troupe, the Empire Burlesquers, at the head of which is Roger Imhof, in that screamer, "Casey the Piper." In the house bill are Bush and Elliott, in tumbling feats; Russell and Held; the D'Elmar brothers, acrobats; "Sandy" Chapman, Boston's favorite; White and Silver; Burdeck sisters; Ferry and Pearce; Semper sisters; Cruikshank, the humorist; Leonzo, the juggling butcher, and Billy Pryor.

Columbia Theatre

Bostonians can always depend on seeing something good and something out of the ordinary when the Parisian Belles strike town. In the company are Harry and Julia Seyon, Dale and Rossi, Charlie Taylor, Gladys Sears, La Petite Duseth and the Three Armstrongs. An olio of five acts will be given between the two burlettas. Taylor's Scotch Lassies, fourteen of the liveliest "broilers" in America, are the big feature in the afterpiece. This act is the big surprise of the year in the burlesque world. Lucia [illegible] is the wrestling card for next Wednesday night. Amateurs are scheduled for Thursday and Friday evenings. Bargain matinees for ladies will be given all week except Saturday.

Austin & Stone's Museum

The swiftest whirling dervishes and the most dextrous gun spinners this country has seen are doing a great specialty act this week at Austin & Stone's Museum. Miss Marie Bayrooty with a remarkable record for continuous whirling has astonished everybody by her great staying powers. Toy Petite, the baby monkey, has new admirers every day. The theatre this week will have a lot of new features, including "A Pink Tea," a musical affair, presented by the Manhattan Girls. Other stage numbers will be Norma Phara, Lillian Weathers, the octoroon dancer; the Watts trio, the Meadows Comedy Company

Lyceum Theatre

An attraction of unusual excellence is the Casino Girls' big extravaganza company. It is quite the most pretentious thing ever presented in burlesque, being an elaborate musical comedy and extravaganza. The scenery and costumes this year are finer than ever, while the company is composed of the pick of the profession. The specialties embrace many novelties never before offered here. In spite of the elaborateness of the production there will be the usual matinees and no advance in prices.

Palace Theatre

The Bon Ton burlesquers is composed of versatile funmakers and genuine burlesque beauties. "Pousse Cafe" and "The Girl from Mars" will introduce the ensemble. The olio will present "The Girl with the Red Mask" in a sensational dancing number; the "Eight English Cocktails," an octette of clever girls from London; Rawson and Clare in their funny creation, "Just Kids"; Woods and Green, "The Ballroom Boys," and Ben Pierce, a Boston boy who is one of the best German comedians in burlesque. The Palace company will also contribute a splendid bill with new pictures by the Palacescope

Bijou Dream

"The third time this week," remarked a woman who dropped four tickets into the chopper at the head of the crystal staircase in the Bijou Dream, Saturday afternoon, and then lined up three children before the ticket taker. "I came alone on Monday, and you had such a splendid programme that when I came in Wednesday to finish my shopping I brought some friends in to see it, and to-day I brought the children. The best of it is, I see something new every time I come." So great has become the attendance that the hours during which the Bijou Dream is kept open has been extended.

Boston Food Fair

The Boston Food Fair for 1908 will be held in the Park Square Coliseum for five weeks, from September 28 to October 31. This fair is conducted by the Boston Retail Grocers' Association, which has already conducted six very successful food fairs in Boston. The work of remodelling the Coliseum for the opening as an exposition building will begin at once. The Boston Retail Grocers' Association has shown its wisdom in selecting Sousa's far-famed band to entertain patrons for three consecutive weeks. The price of admission will remain the same as in former years, 25 cents, and there will be no extra charge of any kind. The admission price will include everything, even to seats in the balconies for the band concerts. Some important manufacturing exhibits have been arranged for, such as showing every detail, from the growth and picking of the raw material to the manufactured article ready for the table. The exhibition committee has for its chairman this year Mr. A. L. Stark, and the other members are C. R. Fuller, H. L. Thompson, E. F. Snow, C. M. Earle, J. R. Robinson and F. E. Willis. The man at the helm, with all the details of planning and building an immense food exhibition, is E. S. Gilmore, the general manager

Change at the Globe

A radical change in the policy of the Globe Theatre will be inaugurated a week from to-morrow when Mayer and Sweeney will present a season of musical comedy productions by a thoroughly high-grade company of seventy people. The first production will be what the management happily terms "A 1908 Version of '1492,'" with Richard Harlow in his original role of Isabella, "The Daisy Queen of Spain." It is the intention of Mayer and Sweeney to give a series of productions at one dollar prices on a scale such as is usually seen only where two dollars is charged. Both new and old musical comedies will be given, and the term "musical comedy" is used to make clear the fact that comic operas and light operas are not to be included in the list. The list of musical comedies to be revived includes only such standard successes as "1492," "The Belle of New York," "The Rounders," "Fantana," "San Toy," "The Girl from Maxims," etc. Several new pieces, never produced on any stage, are also in preparation. No length of time is assigned to any production. The piece will be run so long as the public seem to want it. For the "1908 Version of '1492,'" an excellent cast has been secured. Headed by Richard Harlow the list includes Nellie Daly, Budd Ross, May Bouton, Neil McNeil, Charles H. Bowers, Anna McNabb, Laurel Atkin, May Merrill, Hughie Flaherty, Waldo Whipple and Peter Maguire

Benefit at the Park

Monday, May 4, will be an interesting occasion to patrons of the Park Theatre, for that night has been set aside for the complimentary benefit to the popular young men in the box office, James R. Kean, the treasurer, and Frank Cauley, the ticket agent. Both at the Park and before that at the historic Boston Museum until that house was torn down, these officials have been looking out for the interests of the amusement seeking public, and the result is a large personal following of warm friends. The attraction is popular Rose Stahl in "The Chorus Lady."

Dr. Greene's NERVURA BLOOD & NERVE REMEDY

SLEEPLESSNESS.

A thousand years till morning! What is the matter? You are dead tired and worn out, but you cannot sleep.

Sleeplessness drives away beauty and shatters health. It breaks down the strongest and kills energy. One sleepless night works more lasting injury than days of overwork.

Insomnia is Nature's revolt against outrage. The nerves are being tortured and they rebel. Nearly always stomach trouble accompanies it. The whole body is being starved. Nerves and blood and muscle and tissue cry out for food. Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy is the unfailing help for this condition.

Mrs. Martha Jordan, New Vineyard, Me., says:

"I was in bad shape when I began to take Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. I could not sleep nights, and many times I had to get up and walk the floor. I had no appetite and what little I did eat soured in a few moments. I was nervous, weak and trembling, and got up in the morning more tired than when I went to bed, and felt all down,—in fact, could not see anything worth living for.

"After taking one bottle of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, I could sleep all night and feel rested in the morning, my appetite was better, food did not sour, and I felt better all over. Now when I have taken four bottles I feel like a new being."

Take courage if you suffer in this way, or with any chronic trouble of the nerves and blood. The glorious record of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy is written in the grateful words of thousands it has cured. It will cure you.

Now is the time to take Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, the greatest and best Spring remedy the world has ever known.

Dr. Greene is the well known public medical lecturer and specialist in treatment of all nervous and chronic diseases, and can be personally consulted at his office, 34 Temple Pl., Boston, Mass., or by mail, free.

EXPECTS TO ARREST MAN IN MULLINS CASE AT HOME IN ST. JOHN'S.

SUSPECT TRACED TO HOME

SHE INVOLVED NEW MAN

SO sure is Chief of Police Urquhart of Arlington that on his arrival at St. John's N. F., to-morrow morning he will locate there the man who is wanted on the charge of killing Annie Mullins, that he has sent a peremptory order to a Boston woman witness that she must not talk about the case under penalty of arrest.

This woman had talked about the case before. She was the one who gave the first explanation of a possible motive for the crime. Early in the week when she was located by newspaper men she talked freely about what she knew Arrest Threatened.

Anxious that no word of his intended move should reach St. John's before him Chief Urquhart made a call on this woman just before his departure, and said to her:

"You must not talk to any newspaper men or to anybody about what you have told me. Your failure to keep quiet until such time as you are called upon to give your testimony will necessitate my asking for your arrest and detention as a witness."

Frightened by this message from the police chief, the young woman has remained in seclusion ever since. Last night she stated what had been told her by the police and told a Boston American reporter that under no circumstances did she feel at liberty to tell anything she knew.

These were the questions which were put to the young witness and which she refused to answer

"How long ago did your relative live here?"

"Did you ever hear him threaten harm to Annie Mullins?"

"Did Miss Mullins do anything to anger him?"

"When did you last hear from this man?"

"Has he been in Boston recently?"

"Where did he make his home while he was here?"

Net Draws Closer.

The young woman was evidently troubled by the interrogations, although it is said that, pressed by the police, she had answered all of the questions

"I cannot talk to you," she said. "I simply dare not. It would mean trouble for me, I am sure."

Dispatches from St. John's to the Boston Sunday American last night say that the excitement there over the revelations made regarding the new suspect is intense and that little else is being talked about in the city.

Chief of Police Sullivan said: "I believe that this suspect is capable of committing any crime. I have traced his history, and firmly believe that he is implicated in the death of Annie Mullins, but it may be a difficult matter to prove it. I do not know what evidence the Massachusetts officers have in their possession. They are expected here Sunday or Monday."

It is reported that a woman much wanted by the officers as a witness may be asked to accompany them back to Boston.

It was just before their hurried departure from Boston that the officers learned from the important young woman witness several facts that they did not know before.

Was Seen In Cambridge.

It caused them to start an investigation to ascertain if the man they sought had been in Boston on or preceding the Friday night that Annie Mullins was slain.

It is said that the discovery was made that this man had not only been in Boston, but had actually been seen on the streets of Cambridge.

His departure for St. John's was learned. Immediately Chief Urquhart and State Officer Byrnes started for the Newfoundland city. They have every reason to believe that they will find the man they want when they arrive, secure in the belief that no suspicion has been cast in his direction.

By the statement which he has given to the Boston Sunday American for the first time to-day, John Leroy Perkins, the second man to be taken to the Arlington police station and there questioned by the police, and whose room was thoroughly searched, tells how he came to be under suspicion, and how he cleared himself. Perkins was able to account for every hour of his time on the Friday night on which Annie Mullins was killed and was quickly eliminated by the police.

Evidences of Crime.

It has been said by some of the officials that Annie Mullins committed suicide, and that even the absence of a weapon near the body could not account for her death in any other way. Superintendent John Murphy of St. Paul's Cemetery, the first man to arrive on the scene after the discovery of the body by two boys, made a careful examination of the place before he called the police, and discovered evidence which showed that no weapon could have been near the body, and that the marks on the ground plainly showed the presence of another person.

FOOTPRINTS OF MAN AND THE BLOODSTAINS UPSET SUICIDE TALK

Against the supposition of some officials, who maintain that Annie Mullins probably committed suicide, accounting for the fact

GOING-GOING-GONE! HOW THE BANK OF THE REPUBLIC WAS SOLD.

First National Bid $300,000 Bonus For It and Thought It Had Swallowed the Canary.

THEN GASTON STEPPED IN

Shawmut Bid $610,000 and Got It and Then the Merry Banking War Began.

HAYDEN ENGINEERED DEAL

Another Institution Now Said to Hold Eye of New "Financial Napoleon of New England."

WHEN the National Shawmut Bank announced last Tuesday morning that it had swallowed the National Bank of the Republic over night, the most surprised man in Boston was Daniel G. Wing, president of the First National Bank.

Mr. Wing thought he had it all fixed so that the First National, which, by the way, is a Lee, Higginson institution, had obtained control of the Republic.

The story, as it was told yesterday in banking circles was that Charles Hayden of the firm of Hayden, Stone & Company had formed a little syndicate of Republic stockholders and had asked Mr. Wing how much of a bonus the First National would pay for the stock of the Republic.

Willing to Pay $300,000 Bonus

Mr. Wing had offered Mr. Hayden and his syndicate a bonus of $15 a share. As the Republic is capitalized at $2,000,000 this meant that the First National was willing to pay a bonus of $300,000 for the fine fat business of the Bank of the Republic.

Mr. Wing was under the impression that Mr. Hayden had accepted the offer. Mr. Wing was sticking his thumbs in the armpits of his waistcoat and was feeling very much like the cat that had just swallowed the canary.

[illegible] then, his feelings on Tuesday morning when he read in the papers that the National Shawmut Bank had bought the good will and business of the Bank of the Republic.

The details of the transaction were not made public at the time. Colonel William A. Gaston, president of the Shawmut, knew what he had paid for the Republic, and Mr. Hayden, who had arranged the deal on the part of the syndicate of Republic stockholders, knew how much they had received for the stock, but they weren't telling everybody.

The news leaked out. Yesterday it was pretty well understood in banking circles that Mr. Gaston had paid the tidy little sum of $610,000 to obtain the business of the Bank of the Republic. That is to say, the Shawmut Bank paid a bonus of $30.50 a share on the Republic's stock.

Directors are Honored

It was further said yesterday that five of the directors of the National Bank of the Republic have been offered 2,000 shares in the Shawmut Bank at much less than the market price, and that they are to appear on the directorate of the big bank. The men who are to enjoy this honor are said to be Charles A. Vialle, president of the Bank of the Republic, Albert Stone, Charles Hayden, Jacob F. Brown and William H. Wellington.

Messrs. Hayden, Brown and Wellington are credited with having arranged the deal that put one of the oldest national banks in Boston, one which was capitalized at two million dollars and which had upwards of twelve million dollars in deposits, upon the market and sold it to the highest bidder.

The plan to get control of the Bank of the Republic is said to have been made over a year ago. The first step was taken when the Bank of the Republic's capital stock was increased in order to allow the Republic to purchase the Freeman's National Bank. This increase in the stock of the Bank of the Republic took the control of the Republic from the hands that formerly held it and placed it in the hands of Messrs. Hayden, Brown, Wellington and their friends.

Scramble For Business.

Not the least interesting phase of this absorption of the Bank of the Republic is the scramble that has set in among the few remaining "independent" banks to get some of the business formerly done by the Republic. No sooner had the announcement of the sale of the Bank of the Republic been made than advertisements of banks began appearing in the papers. These advertisements were so worded as to appeal to those business men who do not like the building up of a single financial power in Boston strong enough to dominate all interests.

Among the banks whose advertisements appeared immediately after the announcement of the sale of the Bank of the Republic were the First National, the Boylston National, the Eliot, the Boston Safe Deposit & Trust Company, the International Trust Company, the Old Colony Trust Company, the New England National, the Liberty Trust Company, the Beacon Trust Company, and last, but certainly not least, the Shawmut National Bank itself.

Col. Gaston's Ambition.

No bank sale in the process of consolidation that has been going on in Boston for the last few years has aroused so much discussion among business men as has this sale of the Republic to the Shawmut.

President Gaston is credited with having expressed recently his ambition to build up in Boston "the largest single banking power outside of New York." His absorption of the Bank of the Republic is regarded as a long stride in this direction. As a result of it Col. Gaston is becoming known as the "financial Napoleon" of New England.

Col. Gaston is said to have his eye on still another large National bank which he hopes to "consolidate" with the Shawmut.

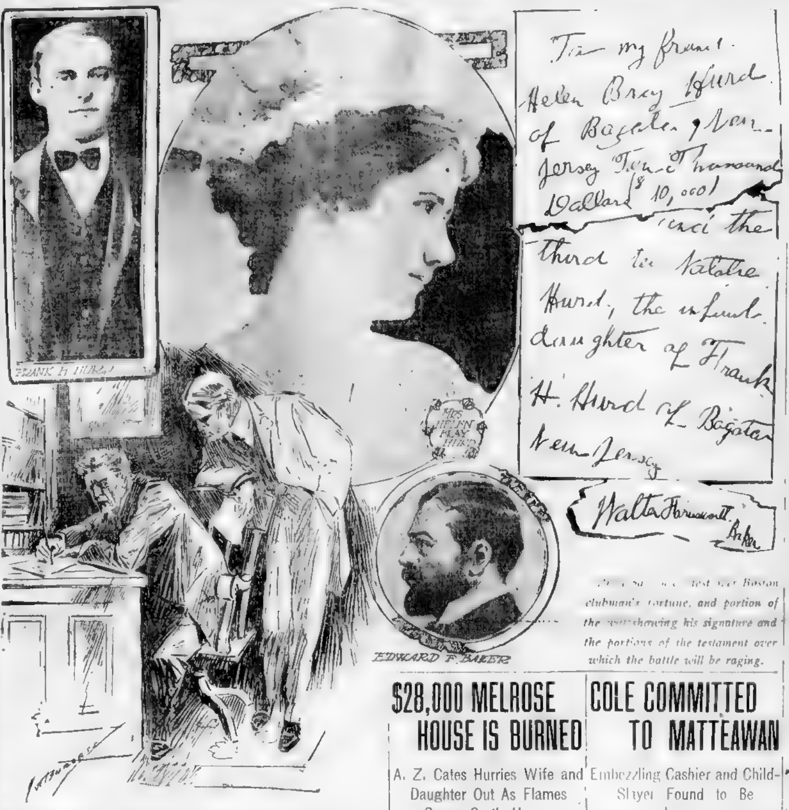
Clubman's Strange Signature and Writing To Figure in Bitter Fight Over Baker Will



To my friend Helen Bray Hurd of Bogota, New Jersey Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000) and the third to Natalie Hurd, the infant daughter of Frank H. Hurd of Bogota New Jersey

Walter Farnsworth Baker

[illegible] contest over Boston clubman's fortune, and portion of the will showing his signature and the portions of the testament over which the battle will be raging.

HURDS HERE TO BATTLE IN COURT FOR FORTUNE

Contest Over Walter F. Baker's Will Begins To-Morrow; New Evidence Expected.

IN THE Probate Court to-morrow begins one of the most remarkable will contests ever undertaken before the Massachusetts judiciary, the effort of Edward F. Baker to break the will of his brother, Walter Farnsworth Baker, who died in Bogota, N.J., from poison. Edward Baker alleges improper and insufficient execution of the will, mental incapacity and undue influence.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hurd, who benefit by the will through the death of their little daughter, Natalie, who was left one-third of the estate by young Baker in addition to $10,000 given outright to Mrs. Hurd, are in Boston to battle for the fortune. With them is Mrs. Hurd's sister, Mrs. George W. Young, who was with Baker and the Hurds on the automobile ride from Brown's chop house in New York to Bogota, where Baker died soon after his arrival.

By this will Walter Baker disposed of an estate valued at about $4[illegible]. He left $5,000 to his brother, $10,000 to Mrs. Helen Bray Hurd at whose house he died, and the rest of the estate he ordered divided into three parts.

Hurds Are in Boston

Harvard college was to get [illegible], Natalie Hurd, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hurd, one third, and the remainder to be divided between his nephews, Robert Keith Baker and [illegible] Baker. Natalie Hurd died soon after, and her share of the estate reverts to her parents.

In the great fight which begins to-morrow, Harvard College, through its attorneys, defends the will as do attorneys for the Hurds.

The members of the Hurd family are registered at the Hotel Bellevue, where they are in the seclusion of their rooms. In the party are Mr. and Mrs. Frank S. Hurd, Mrs. George W. Young, Mrs. Hurd's sister; Miss Mary [illegible] Munn of Bogota, N. J., one of the witnesses to the Baker will, and Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm E. Lawrance of Brooklyn. Mr. Lawrance is the Hurd attorney, who is here to conduct the contest in their interests.

The party occupies three rooms at the [illegible] which they have engaged for two weeks. They arrived quietly [illegible] and have remained [illegible] giving orders that under no [illegible] was anyone to be admitted [illegible]. On previous visits to Boston [illegible] occupied a suite at the Hotel [illegible]

Contest Will Be Bitter

That both sides are prepared for a hard legal battle was shown by [illegible] conferences which were held [illegible] afternoon and evening. Edward F. $28,000 MELROSE HOUSE IS BURNED

A. Z. Cates Hurries Wife and Daughter Out As Flames Sweep Costly Home.

The home of A. Z. Cates, at the corner of Greenwood and Franklin streets, Melrose Highlands, was destroyed by fire early last night. The blaze started from an over-heated furnace in which coke was used as fuel.

The fire was discovered by Mr. Cates while he was eating his supper. Having occasion to go to the kitchen he saw the flames bursting through the walls. He hurried his wife and small daughter Ruth from the house and rang in an alarm. A second alarm was necessary, as the flames had mounted to the top of the house and the large cupola on the roof fell in with a crash.

Sparks ignited several surrounding houses, but the incipient blazes were extinguished by the occupants.

The Cates house was valued at $28,000 and was one of the show houses of Melrose. Mr. Cates bought the house eleven months ago and presented it to his wife.

Mrs. Cates was taken to the home of Oscar W. French and a physician called as she was hysterical.

The damage to the furnishings in the house was $9,000, with insurance of $6,500. The house was insured for $10,500. The fire department saved $1,000 worth of clothing, beside the family silver.

DEATH AND RUIN BY FURIOUS GALE

Sharing Windstorm Sweeps New England, Leaving Path of Wreckage in It's Wake.

2 MEN DEAD; SCORE HURT

Buffetted by Tremendous Waves, Shipping All Along the Coast in Great Peril

3 TOWNS IN DARKNESS

Fisherman Wrecked on Island in Harbor; Fear for Safety of Boat With Two Men.

WHAT THE STORM DID.

Thousands of dollars damage to property in Boston and nearby towns.

Shipping in peril all along the coast.

Quincy man shipwrecked on Grape Island.

Three fishermen lost in Long Island Sound.

Medford, Arlington and Dedham in darkness for hours and people in peril from broken electric light wires.

In New York, two men killed, one fatally hurt, scores injured; buildings unroofed, heavy walls blown down and falling wreckage a menace to traffic in the streets.

Velocity of wind in Boston, forty-two miles an hour.

THE furious windstorm which swept over Boston and the entire eastern portion of the United States yesterday caused thousands of dollars damage to property on land and sea, and resulted in a large number of fatalities before the full force of its fury had been spent. It was the worst storm of the year and seemed all the more severe because it came with so little warning.

Shipping all along the north Atlantic coast was in peril and it is feared that many smaller vessels caught in the gale far from a sheltering harbor may have suffered heavily. Not a single vessel was able to enter Boston harbor after 6 o'clock yesterday, and many scheduled to leave during the day postponed their departure until the wind subsided.

Narrow Escapes From Death.

Throughout all sections of the city signs and awnings suffered heavy damage and passersby had narrow escapes from death or injury from debris crashing down in the streets. The damage to plate glass windows alone in the city and the suburbs is estimated at several thousand dollars.

One window which proved too weak to withstand the terrific force of the wind was in the store of the Woodward Company at the corner of Bosworth place and Tremont street. When it crashed inward it caused a small panic among the women shoppers who thronged the place. One woman was frightened into hysterics and had to be attended by a physician. She declined to give her name and went home in a car.

Trees blown against electric light wires plunged Medford, Dedham and Arlington into darkness for several hours. Live wires writhing like snakes made the streets dangerous for traffic, but luckily there were no casualties.

Trees and shrubberies in the suburban towns were a favorite prey of the gale. Many large trees which had for years been landmarks in their respective localities were torn up by the roots like saplings.

Swept on Island by Gale.

All night long on lonely wind and wave swept Grape Island two and one-half miles from the shore in Quincy Bay, Albert Grant, aged fifty-four years, of No. 109 Bracket street, Quincy, kept lonely vigil by a flickering fire which he had built of driftwood when he was swept ashore by the gale. Three attempts were made by owners of motor boats to rescue him, but the waves ran to high and the efforts had to be abandoned.

Grant, yesterday afternoon went a fishing in Quincy Bay in a flat-bottomed, home-made boat. He was about two miles from the shore at Houghs Neck when the gale swept down upon the awkward little craft.

Grant tried to hoist his sail, but the force of the wind was so great that he was unable to raise the sheet, and the boat was driven before the wind until it grounded on Grape Island. Without no protection whatever from the wind and sea Grant frantically made signals to the shore for aid.

PERKINS ELIMINATED FROM MULLINS CRIME

Tells For American How He Has Suffered From Unjust Suspicion in Case.

John Leroy Perkins, the second man to be questioned by the police in the Annie Mullins murder mystery and whose lips were sealed by request of the officials, has broken his silence and in his own defence tells for the first time the story of his acquaintance with the murdered girl and his doings on the night she was slain.

Perkins told his story to a Boston Sunday American representative. It was given freely by the young man, who from circumstances that were no fault of his own, had the light of suspicion thrown upon him.

"I don't suppose anyone want to persecute a fellow who is innocent of any wrong doing," [illegible] young Perkins, [illegible] hasn't had the experience [illegible] to me to realize what it means. As I look over the situation now it seems to have been like a dream, a mighty tough and bitter dream at that.

Suffers Grave Suspicion.

Perkins was seated in the store of W. W. Seavey in Davis square, [illegible] where he is employed and where they had faith in him all through the ordeal and protected him by every means in their power. Those who know him say that the strain has been hard for the young man to bear.

Without warning on the Saturday after the body of Annie Mullins was found in Squire's field, Arlington, this young man, who, as he tells it, only knew the girl from having delivered orders at the house of Prof. von Jagemann on Walker street, Cambridge, was called upon by the police and asked to explain his whereabouts on the Friday night the girl was slain.

He explained, gave the officers the facts they sought, gave them permission to search his room. Then he was allowed to go, but told to hold himself in readiness for the inquest.

He found that his name was connected with the case. He even heard that the dead girl had said a day or two previous to her death that it was with him that she had an engagement on the night she went to Arlington. He found many to believe in him; found others who looked askance when his name was mentioned.

"Some Good Friends."

"It has been a pretty strenuous time for me since my name was first connected with this case," the young man said with a half smile. "But as I look on it now I feel that I was partly at fault because I didn't come right out at first and insist that everybody should know my connection with it—or lack of connection with this crime. It is a mistake that I see how anybody could easily make who never before passed through such an experience. But it has shown me that I have some good friends anyway."

He waved his hand toward the other clerks who were busy attending to customers in the big store. He found those associates of his were ready to fight anybody who said a word against him. Perkins, however, is able to care for himself. He is a good sized, manly looking young man, and because of his natural ability to meet people pleasantly and courteously, he is valued as a salesman of experience.

"Every man here would go to the limit for Perkins," said one employe, emphatically. "We felt pretty mad when we found he had been drawn into the case, because we knew he was all right and couldn't be connected with such an affair."

"Hard to Live Down."

"From those who know me, I have nothing to fear," Perkins joined in, "but let me ask you squarely, isn't it a pretty tough thing for a fellow to live down? But I'm keeping up my spirits pretty well under the circumstances, I think.

"Now I was fortunately able to tell the police about every move that I made on that Friday night and they discovered that what I told them was true. Everything that I could remember I told them and asked them to look me up thoroughly. I guess they accounted for me about as well as a man could be accounted for.

"But suppose that I hadn't been able to tell them what they wanted to know? It makes me shake sometimes to think of what a hole I might have been in if I hadn't remembered what I did that night.

"I have thought it over now that the public won't stop thinking about me in connection with this case unless I am set right somehow. That is why I decided to talk to the Sunday American to-day. I want to explain so that everybody will know just where I was on that night.

How He Spent Evening

"It was late when I got through that [illegible] 6.30, when I got out of the store here. I went over to the [illegible] 'Rob' McDonald. [illegible] home [illegible] supper it was 7 o'clock. From there I went to the shoe store, next door, and was there at D. F. Fram's until 7:30. Next I went outside, into the square, and at ten minutes to eight walked up to the post office. It closes at 8 o'clock, and I was there at closing time talking with [illegible] at the stamp window. From the post office I returned to the square and again met 'Rob' McDonald. I was with him at about 8.30. I used up about half an hour, then walking down to Briggs' music store. I got back here at 9.15, and finding William Rollins, stayed with him in this store until 9.30. Then I went across to 'Doc' Eaton's drug store, arriving before 10 o'clock, and bought soda and cigars.

"Leaving the drug store, I reached the lunch cart, say five minutes past ten, and spoke with Louis Phill a few minutes and I got home at ten minutes past ten o'clock.

"All those things were easily verified by the police. I ask you to go around and satisfy yourself. If anybody interested for or against me has the slightest doubt how I put in that Friday evening I wish they would call on the people I have named and learn for themselves.

"Naturally I claim that I have been abused by all this talk. I wasn't responsible for the connection of my name with Annie Mullins's, and it does seem as though there ought to be more secret investigation, when a man's lifelong reputation is at stake.

Regrets His Silence.

"Don't understand from this that I am going around crying about it. On the contrary I guess I have kept too quiet, if anything.

"I would have had something to say before only I was advised to keep quiet. Even some of the police suggested that the easiest way was to say nothing and let things go.

"Of course I realize that I can't do anything. People will think and say what they choose. But it seems to me the papers, after writing me up so fully, should be willing to repair the damage a little. Perhaps they would, only I have kept out of the way of the reporters, thinking it was the best for me.

"One thing surprised me, and that was when I saw my picture in the Boston American. I didn't imagine that one could be obtained in Cambridge.

"Now I want to ask you to see the Cambridge police and the Arlington police and just ask them if I didn't tell them every word of the truth."

"Truthful," Say Police.

Captain Hurley of the Cambridge detective force agreed that Perkins was truthful and was entirely eliminated from the investigation so far as any suspicion of connection with the death of Annie Mullins goes. He said:

"At the very start we reasoned that Annie Mullins could not, as she is reported to have said in South Boston, have an appointment with Perkins. If she had an appointment she would have been dressed and had her supper dishes cleared away, and she would have admitted to Mrs. von Jagemann that she was going out that evening instead of denying that she was to leave the house. Her every movement up to almost the time she left indicated that she had no intention of going out. Therefore a mistake existed on this point. Either she said merely in fun that she was to meet Perkins that Friday night, or else her relatives misunderstood her. So much for theory.

"When we called John Leroy Perkins to explain things he denied first and last that he ever had an appointment with Annie Mullins, and did not attempt to mislead us once as to his whereabouts on the evening of the crime.

His Story Wholly Correct.

"Then to satisfy ourselves further we called upon the persons he named and who were with him that Friday night, and in every instance they corroborated his statements. This gave him a complete alibi."

When Mr. Perkins was informed of the good things said about him by the police he seemed much gratified.

"I am not so sure," added Mr. Perkins, "that Annie Mullins ever said she had an appointment with me. I can see, from reading and from my knowledge of the case, that it was very easy for a mistake to have been made. Besides, some of them have not been as careful of the truth as I should like, and this terrible experience of the last two weeks has shown me, among other things, that it is very easy, where the public takes such an interest, for misrepresentations to creep in and get widely circulated.

"Long, Terrible Dream."

"It is good, though, after such a thing as this to find that a man has friends who are willing to stand by him to the end. These friends I have found during the last two weeks and I am proud of the fact that they call themselves my friends. That is the one bright side that I can see to this whole affair.

"The rest is to me one long, terrible dream that I am trying to forget."

Perkins concluded the interview abruptly, but courteously. He went to wait on a customer, smiling slightly, but evincing interest in the slightest request made of him.

He has been eliminated, forgotten by the police. Only those anxious to linger longest over morsels of suspicion think of John Leroy Perkins as connected in any way with the Annie Mullins tragedy.

How It Feels to Be Suspected of Murder When Wholly Innocent

John Leroy Perkins.

By John Leroy Perkins

"ANYONE who has not gone through the trying ordeal to which I have been subjected during the past weeks cannot appreciate the sufferings through which I have passed.

"As I look over the situation now it seems to me to have been like a dream, a mighty tough and bitter dream at that.

"From those who know me, I have nothing to fear, but let me ask you squarely, isn't it a pretty tough thing for a fellow to live down? I'm keeping up my spirits pretty well under the circumstances, I think.

UNIFORM COAT FOUND IN DITCH IS THE LATEST EXHIBIT IN MYSTERY

There has been added to the list of exhibits which have been turned over to the police by searchers of Alewife Brook and the railroad tracks, some of which may later figure in the identification of the slayer of Annie Mullins, a blue semi-uniform coat, such as is generally worn by street railway conductors.

It was found by Charles Pangborn of Teele street, Arlington, whose house overlooks Squire's field. Mr. Pangborne, since the murder, has spent much of his time in going over the vicinity of the crime in a systematic way in the search for evidence.

Mr. Pangborne located the coat in a ditch beside the Boston & Maine railroad embankment about 200 yards from Little Spy Pond and perhaps a quarter of a mile from the place where Annie Mullins's body was found.

The coat is not an old one, but the man who owned it [illegible] to all appearances been in a pretty [illegible] somewhere. The buttons had been [illegible] off with considerable violence. Numerous holes and tears were noticed, as though it had been in contact with a number of barbs on a wire fence. These were mostly on the left side about the left shoulder.

In the pockets were found a one cent Canadian postage stamp and a small piece of a foreign newspaper.

Mr. Pangborne turned the coat over to Inspector Mooney of the Arlington force, who will have it thoroughly examined. It was noticed that there were a number of stains of something about the front, but because of the length of time the garment had remained out in the wet, it was impossible from a casual examination to ascertain what the stains were.

FOOTPRINTS OF MAN UPSET SUICIDE TALK

that no weapon was found near the body by the statement that it was probably carried away by someone who arrived on the scene after the finding of the body is the testimony of John Murphy, superintendent of St. Paul's cemetery, the first man to view the body as it lay in Squires field.

Mr. Murphy yesterday declared to a Boston Sunday American reporter that he searched the vicinity with the greatest care for ten minutes before he notified the police, loking for the weapon with which the deed had been committed. He found none. Up to the time that he arrived the only ones who had seen the body or been near it were Louis M. Cheever and Walter M. Cook, the boys who notified Mr. Murphy.

Finger Prints on Gloves.

Furthermore Mr. Murphy saw distinctly the tracks made by two persons, saw the ground had been trampled upon, saw many other marks that were obliterated by the crowd of the curious which gathered when the news of the tragedy spread.

Examining the body closely, Mr. Murphy saw also the marks of a bloody thumb and fingers on the wrist of one glove. Of this Mr. Murphy is positive.

Methodical and an expert in the examination of the dead, Mr. Murphy overlooked none of these things in the ten minute survey he had of the remains of Miss Mullins at the scene.

This expert, who had an opportunity to see many things which the police did not see when they arrived, is satisfied that Miss Mullins was murdered. In his statement to a Sunday American man, the first complete analysis he has made of the case, Mr. Murphy says:

Thought Woman Asleep.

"I suppose that this whole affair is none of my business, but I would like to see justice done. And what I saw with my own eyes makes me positive that this girl was murdered. How the police can think otherwise is more than I can understand, unless they wish to explain in some way a mystery which they are unable to solve.

"I was at work here in the cemetery on Saturday morning, March 28, when the boys came running up to me and said there was a woman lying asleep in Squire's field and they were afraid she was either sick or drunk. I looked at my watch and saw that it was 11 o'clock. As I had two funerals due that day I was not anxious to leave the place, for I had a great deal to do. The boys [illegible] so much [illegible] about what they had seen, however, that I at last consented to go and see what it was.

"When I started out I had no idea that I was going to find close at hand the mute evidence of a tragedy. One glance at the motionless body of the woman, before I was close enough to see the wounds in her throat, told me that this was no drunken creature, but that she was either dead or unconscious.

"There has been murder here, was my first thought, and it is my duty to try to find the weapon. First I went over to the boys, made them write their names and addresses and told them not to go away until after the police had seen them. Then I made a careful search of the surrounding ground for a knife or razor. There was none to be seen.

Police Slow to Arrive

"I returned to the field directly and waited nearly half an hour for the police to arrive. In the meantime a crowd of fully 200 people gathered around the body and I had my hands full trying to keep them from obliterating the blood stains and the foot prints on the turf.

"I do not believe any of these people picked up the knife. In the first place, most of the crowd were women and children, and they were half hysterical at the ghastly sight which lay before them. Then, it is contrary to human nature for any person to pick up a bloodstained knife at the scene of a murder and carry it away without saying anything about it.

"Satisfied now that there had been murder, I examined the body more closely. One glove I noticed at once was drenched with blood. On the left, just below the wrist, were the unmistakable prints of a man's fingers. No sane man could have taken the marks for anything else.

"I had now spent fully ten minutes in looking over the scene of the crime without finding any signs of a weapon. I went over to the cemetery to telephone for the police, leaving the two boys to watch the body.

"What impressed me most was the fact that there were big splotches of blood on the grass for a distance of fully nine feet on three sides of the body. The turf was trampled in places, too, as if two or more people had walked there before sitting down.

"I looked closely in the soft earth for some more definite prints and was not disappointed. A short distance over the side of the bank, and not more than [illegible] inches from the body, the prints of a man's two feet were plainly visible. They were such prints, I roughly calculated, as would have been made by No. 7 shoes.

"The knife that did Annie Mullins to death was carried away by the man who drew it across the girl's throat, by the man whose footprints I saw with my own eyes at her feet and whose finger marks were plainly visible on her gloves."

This remarkable story is borne out in every particular by the testimony of Louis M. Cheever and Walter M. Cook, the sixteen-year-old Somerville boys who were the first to see the body of Annie Mullins and who [illegible] from the sight to give the alarm.

FIND TEN SECRET INDICTMETS

Ten secret indictments were included in the report made yesterday by the Suffolk Grand Jury for April, which has been hearing evidence in the case of Cardenio F. King, the absent financial agent.

As usual in the case of secret indictments, no mention was made of the person indicted when Clerk Manning of the Superior Court read the jury's report.

The King case was the last, or one of the last, considered by the Grand Jury Friday afternoon. Fifty four witnesses had been summoned to the jury room and thirty six of these were called in to testify.

Assistant District Attorney Michael F. Dwyer handled the case for the county, the police end of the investigation having been made by Inspector John McGarr. These officials sought, it is said, an indictment against King for larceny.

While an investigation has been in progress into King's affairs in Boston, there has been much speculation as to the whereabouts of King himself.

A news story from Raleigh, N. C., King's native state, says that King was interviewed there and quotes him as saying he was on his way back to Boston. This is regarded as improbable, even by King's friends.

Wherever the interview originated, it had the King style in spots, notably where King is quoted as saying:

"I have tied to survive, as many others are trying, with a tenacious confidence in eternal hope for better things."

"Tenacious confidence in eternal hope" is King's English in more senses than one.

Nevertheless, King is believed to be abroad, probably in Greece, but certainly in some place remote from Boston.

King's office fixtures, two automobiles and house furniture will be knocked down at mortgagee's sale the first week in May.

MIGNON ENDS OPERA SEASON IN BOSTON

MISS FARRAR SCORES AGAIN

With the performance of "Mignon" at the Boston Theatre last night the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York closed the most notable single week's season it ever had in this city.

This season was remarkable for three things. Every principal was in perfect health and voice all the week. There was no change in programme or casts. The financial receipts and the patronage were heavier than ever before during a Boston opera season of similar length.

The stars, chorus and other members of the troupe leave Boston to-day for New York and Baltimore. Plans are underway already for a return of the same company to Boston next year.

Manager Lindsay Morrison of the Boston Theatre is particularly pleased that the opera venture here was so successful, both from financial and artistic standpoints.

Miss Geraldine Farrar sang the title role in "Mignon" last night, and Bessie Abott was the Filena. Mme. Jacoby was the Frederick and M. Plancon the Lothario. Miss Farrar never sang quite so well in Boston as she did last night. The audience applauded her repeatedly. Miss Abott [illegible] the general expectation, singing her lines in rather [illegible].

SHOWER GOLDEN GIFTS ON COUPLE

Married fifty years ago, Mr. and Mrs. James Eager of Falmouth street on Friday evening received the golden congratulations of a large number of their friends. Taking possession of the Eager home, the [illegible] of more anniversaries to come piled gifts and good wishes upon the couple. The supper party and musicale which closed the celebration were greatly enjoyed.

GRANITE CITY CLUB ELECTS.

At the annual meeting of the Granite City Club of Quincy last night, these officers were elected: president, Henry F. Tilden; vice-president, [illegible] W. [illegible]; [illegible] W. W. M[illegible]; treasurer, H. W. D[illegible]; [illegible] committee, Benjamin Johnson and Dr. Frederick Jones.

BOSTON WOMEN WILL WORK TO AID RUSSIAN HEROINES

Plan League to Welcome Marie Spiridonova and to Free Katterine Breshkovsky.

With Marie Spiridonova, the Russian Joan of Arc, escaped from her Siberian [illegible] and reported [illegible] on the way to America and Mme. Katherine Breshkovsky, [illegible] leader of the Russian revolutionists, languishing in the terrible fortress of SS. Peter and Paul, Boston women prominent in social [illegible] and many other walks of [illegible] the United States has won the [illegible] American sisters.

Public opinion is to be stirred up, money is to be collected, and a new impetus is to be given to the cause of freeing Russia from the tyranny of the Romanoffs. [illegible] Back Bay [illegible] are to join hands in the movement with the wives, sisters and daughters of [illegible] magnates, and [illegible] to [illegible] the agitation [illegible] steadily and [illegible].

Officials Fear Expose.

Marie Spiridonova's escape, according to advices received but yesterday, from the capital of Russia, is one of the most [illegible] known in the history of the Russian revolution, and caused greater uneasiness among the officials [illegible] another expose of the dreadful [illegible] Siberian mines and prisons [illegible] the public opinion of [illegible] against them.

Marie Spiridonova, who shot and killed General Luzhenovsky for his [illegible] women [illegible] Spanish inquisition [illegible] She was [illegible] were broken [illegible] handcuffs [illegible] her flesh was burned with [illegible] laughed in [illegible] was a mockery [illegible] was sentenced to Siberia.

Few recognized in the emaciated [illegible] creature that entered the [illegible] youthful beauty who [illegible] a few short weeks before seemed not to have had a care in the whole world. But her spirit remained unbroken and with the last ounce of strength she denounced the cruel government and declared her willingness to die a thousand deaths for the revolutionary cause.

Spiridonova was sent to Akatui, the dreaded district of the Yakutsk province, where thousands of political prisoners meet their end through lack of necessities or are driven insane by the terrible conditions of the regime there. But she was determined to live.

Freed by Her Comrades.

"I will live to see Russia free," she used to tell her comrades in prison and the revolutionists never ceased their efforts to secure freedom at least for her who gave her young life on the altar of freedom.

[illegible] that Spiridonova [illegible] to escape [illegible] never [illegible] but they were [illegible] and with each [illegible] to the [illegible] ever to free [illegible] have done great injustice to the members of the Hurd family. When their side of the story is told they will be placed in a very different light. They have had far from a square deal. The testimony will show [illegible] in an entirely new [illegible].

HURDS HERE TO FIGHT FOR BAKER'S WILL

By the plans which the [illegible] are making it is apparent that the [illegible] story of Walter Baker's mysterious death will be gone over in the Probate Court. Sensational testimony will be introduced and the facts surrounding Walter Baker's death will be laid bare. While the Coroner's jury declared that he came to his death by poison administered by some person to them unknown, there never have been any further explanation of his mysterious end.

A letter which is being guarded with the most jealous care will figure in the testimony. It is referred to in the will left by young Baker. In the paragraph in which he announced that he left $10,000 to "my friend, Helen Bray Hurd of Bogota, N. J.," he added "with the request that this be used in according with a letter that I will leave for her."

This will of the young millionaire club man has up to the present time been a secret document. It is published in its full sense in to-day's Sunday American for the first time. It was written by Baker himself in a very large hand, and while extremely brief, his writing covers seven pages.

The signature is peculiar. It occupies two lines, the "Walter Farnsworth" being written on one line and the "Baker" underneath. The document is now on file in the office of Register of Probate Arthur W. Dean.

It is a simple document and is devoid of the usual legal [illegible] accompanying such a [illegible] that the deceased had [illegible] knowledge of legal procedure.

The writing is in [illegible] and the broad sprawling scrawl is at times almost illegible. Although [illegible] a neat writer could easily have [illegible] two pages of the same [illegible] Five or six [illegible] to a page, owing to the [illegible] it is written, all the lines [illegible] have a tendency [illegible]

No seal is attached to the [illegible] does [illegible] State in which it was drawn.

The will is dated February 7, 1907, and the opening paragraph provides that after the expenses and debts are paid out of the estate, the testator leaves $5,000 to his brother, Edward F. Baker.

Provision for Miss Hurd is made next in the following language:

"To my friend Helen Bray Hurd, of Bogota, New Jersey, ten thousand dollars ($10,000), with the request this be used in accordance with a letter that I will leave for her."

He then declares that a [illegible] trust [illegible] divided [illegible] nephews [illegible] Keith Baker and Robert Mun[illegible] the part to the fellows of Harvard University [illegible] Alan Munn [illegible] part to Natalie Bray Hurd, the infant daughter of Frank H. Hurd.

Beneath and on the left are the words, "Witnesses," and below on two separate lines the names of the witnesses, that of Natalie Bray Young, written in a bold, plain, female hand, and Mary Maud Munn

COMMON SENSE TALK

Query—What makes Boston's Only Novelty Store the store for Thrifty people?

Answer—The power of ready cash to buy mdse. and the selling of merchandise at a small profit, on account of the tremendous volume of business done in this store.

Query—Why is Vorenberg's store busy at all times?

Query—Why are other stores constantly imitating Vorenberg's store?

DEATH AND RUIN IN FURIOUS GALE

Two Men Killed and Score Injured, Shipping in Peril As Windstorm Sweeps N. E.

somewhat he was enabled to build a fire from the driftwood he collected on the island. The light was seen from the shore and Dr. Clamson and two others in motor boats made repeated attempts to rescue Grant. The seas were running mountain high and the motor boats were unable to reach the island in safety. Grant's wife and seventeen-year-old passed an anxious night. They only learned of his predicament at a late hour last night after hunting everywhere for tidings of him.

Sloop Yacht in Peril.

Late last night the fifty foot sloop yacht Tartar with Captain George Pettis of No. 813 East [illegible], and a man friend [illegible] in distress off [illegible] The boat was having a hard [illegible] with wind and waves and was evidently unable to make either the Castle Island landing or the City Point [illegible] Mrs. Pettis [illegible] ed for her husband's safety and asked friends to have the police boat Watchman go to his aid.

At an early hour this morning the Watchman had not returned and there were no further tidings from the Tartar to cheer the anxious watchers on shore.

The Tartar with Captain Pettis, his friend and a boy on board, left [illegible] in the afternoon while the gale was at its height. They made [illegible] in safety, but met with serious trouble on the return trip. Becoming alarmed for the safety of the Tartar Captain Pettis hailed a passing steam launch and had the boy taken off. The captain and his friend decided to take their chances with the boat even though the odds were desperate.

Deaths Number Two.

At North Attleboro [illegible] felled the largest tree in the town, a magnificent elm standing seventy-five feet high. The falling trunk came within a few feet of demolishing the house of Edward Kladon at No. 17 Park street.

Dispatches received early this morning from all over the wide area swept by the storm show that other cities suffered even more severely than Boston and vicinity.

In New York the storm for several hours assumed the proportions of a hurricane. Two men were killed, one fatally hurt and scores of others seriously injured as a direct result of the storm. Buildings were unroofed, heavy walls blown down and big trees torn up by the roots and signs and awnings innumerable ripped from their fastenings. Hardly a street in the city last night that was not strewn with wreckage.

An iron rod from an awning at No. 2 Beekman street struck Thomas Talbot, a special police officer, of No. 43 Duffield street, Brooklyn. The blow hurled him two stories down a street elevator shaft and he was instantly killed.

Crushed by Iron Door

An iron door falling in Reade street hit John O'Brien, an expressman, who lived in Jersey City, and he was picked up dead with a fractured skull.

George Allen, of No. 109 West 62d street, was blown from the roof of a three-story building in Lenox avenue, and is dying in a hospital. All day long the ambulances of every hospital in the city were hurrying hither and thither to attend to the injuries of men and women who had been blown off their feet and tossed into the gutters. Conditions like that in the vicinity of the Flatiron building were practically impossible for pedestrians.

Fear For Many Ships.

Already tidings of disaster to ships all along the coast are coming in and it is feared that many vessels have been lost with their crews.

Off Pelham a fishing boat capsized in the storm. Three men on board whose names are unknown, were drowned before help could reach them.

The gale which caused all this havoc came out of the West. It was due, according to the wise weather men, to steep pressure gradient. Before it was over it had paid its violent respects to all the country north of Philadelphia and Washington and east of Scranton, Pa. The prevailing direction of the wind was west to northwest.

It attained a velocity of forty-two miles an hour in Boston, sixty in New York, thirty-six in Philadelphia and fifty-six along the shores of Rhode Island.

According to the weather bureau the worst was over at six o'clock yesterday. For to-day relief is [illegible] in the shape of smiling skies and more moderate westerly winds. The storm of yesterday takes rank as the most severe of its kind thus far this year.

YEGGS WRECK AND LOOT POST OFFICE

Batter Down Door of Wilmington Depot, Blow Safe, Steal $190.

Wilmington, April 11.—All day Chief Swain of the Wilmington police followed clews to the yeggs who visited the North Wilmington postoffice this morning, but he has not been able to get on the track of the safe blowers.

The postoffice is in the North Wilmington station of the Boston & Maine railroad. Warren Carter, the station agent, who also has charge of the postoffice, locked the office and station at 9 o'clock last night. This morning he found the door battered down, the office wrecked, and the safe door lying on the floor. The yeggs succeeded in getting away with $190 in cash and stamps.

It is suspected that the break is the work of the gang which broke into the store of George Perry, at Perry's Corner, a week ago.

FATHER'S WILL UPSET BY ONE SMALL BABY

Mount Holly, N. J., April 11.—In the Orphans Court here Judge Horner declared the will of the late Lawyer Samuel W. Shinn of Mount Holly null and void because the document contained no provision to give a share of the estate to the child born since the paper was executed on June 10, 1904. After the formal declaration had been made and Mr. Shinn was placed on record as having died intestate, the widow and Joseph Huff were appointed administrators of the estate.

BILL WOULD CHECK UNJUST RATES OF THE OIL TRUST

Anti-Monopoly Measure Demands One Price to Consumers, and Not Special Prices to Crush Rivals.

The price of oil in Massachusetts:
Boston............ 12 cents
Springfield....... 10 cents
Haverhill........ 13 cents

In Massachusetts to-day, in hardly two cities and towns, is oil selling at the same price. And yet it really costs no more to [illegible] in one town than another. This strange fluctuation in figure, this disproportion, is solely due to the Standard Oil Company and its agents.

Where competition exists, as in Springfield, where Thomas L. Hisgen has for years waged a victorious fight against the Standard, the octopus finds that it can sell oil at ten cents a gallon, while in Boston, where it is supreme, the people must pay twelve cents.

Unjust Discrimination.

In Haverhill [illegible] the Standard was [illegible] its own way, oil was retailing to the people at 13 cents a gallon. This discrimination is exactly what the [illegible] before the State Legislature [illegible]. If that bill is made a law by the men who are supposed to represent the people and who are sworn to pass laws for the betterment of their constituencies, this unjust and absurd discrimination must pass away.

The proposed anti-monopoly law would prevent [illegible] selling oil at one price in one town and at another figure in another [illegible]. Then the anti-monopoly bill the District Attorney or any county prosecuting official could bring an action to restrain violators of the law and hale him before the courts at once. This section of the bill reads:

"Any person, firm, company, association or corporation, foreign or domestic, doing business in this Commonwealth and engaged in the production, manufacture, sale or distribution of any commodity in general use, that shall intentionally for the purpose of destroying the business of a competitor in any locality, discriminate between different sections, communities, cities or towns of this Commonwealth, by selling such commodity at a lower rate in one section, community, city or town, than is charged for such commodity by said party in another section, community, city or town after making due allowance for the difference, if any, in the grade or quality and in the actual cost of transportation from the point of production, if a raw product, or from the point of manufacture, if a manufactured product, shall be deemed guilty of unfair discrimination, which is hereby prohibited."

BARS CHANCE BOOK AT EASTER FAIR

Games of chance will be tabooed at the Easter Fair of the Woman's Suffrage Association to be held in Lorimer Hall, April 16, 17 and 18. Mrs. George S. Lowell, manager of the fair, says that as women are striving for the ballot they should also uphold the law. As lotteries and games of chance are forbidden by law she has ruled out the time honored "chance book" as an attraction of the fair.

James A. Wilson, Esq., [illegible], R. I., "The Man of the Hour."
Rev. J. J. Dunlop, Boston, "The Partnership of Business and Religion."
H. A. Free, Lewiston, Me., "The Welfare of Store Employees in the Dry Goods Trade."

The entertainment features will consist of selections by the [illegible] Club and talent from [illegible] theatres. Walden H. Reed, Jr., will preside at the piano and direct the singing of the Glee Club.

DESPONDENT FOR HUSBAND; SUICIDE

Mrs. Sarah Jane McLaren, fifty-one years old, of No. 404 Saratoga street, East Boston, committed suicide yesterday morning by cutting her throat with a razor. Despondency over the ill health of her husband is supposed to have [illegible]. She is survived by a husband, Josiah McLaren and three children.

SCORES FIRST VICTORY IN BATTLE WITH OIL OCTOPUS

Haverhill Man Follows Lead of Thomas L. Hisgen and Forces Standard's Ally to Seek Cover

Haverhill, April 11.—Following the example set by Thomas L. Hisgen of Springfield in his war on monopoly, Joseph H. Rogers of this city, treasurer and general manager of the Bradford Extracting Company, has begun a fight against the Standard Oil Company in Essex county. Rogers, just as Hisgen has done in the Western part of the State, is exposing the methods of the Rockefeller octopus.

Mr. Rogers for some time past has been engaged in a quiet warfare on the giant trust, which not satisfied with its country-wide monopoly determined to drive him out of Essex county where he has been selling independent oil for a year or more.

Backed By Customers.

Mr. Rogers has the backing of his customers who see [illegible] the trust the effort to gain a monopoly [illegible] to place the price of oil at any figure desired.

Notice of battle was served on Mr. Rogers when the S. E. Wilson Company, known as the Standard's local representative, cut the price of oil from 13 cents a gallon to 5 cents. People flocked to the Wilson store and bought oil in every conceivable vessel.

Rogers, to test the sincerity of the "cut" prices, offering $5,000 in bills, tried to buy [illegible] of the oil and forced the Wilson concern to change its price of oil [illegible] cents a gallon as it had been. The manager of the Wilson concern was forced by his business rival to say that he was selling oil at 5 cents a gallon to customers not to competitors.

In the Fight to Stay.

"I'm in this fight to stay, the same as Thomas L. Hisgen in Springfield," said Mr. Rogers after he had scored first blood in his fight with the Standard to a Boston Sunday American reporter. "Thomas Hisgen has been putting up a clever and determined fight on New England and Royal Oil, and has evidently got now where the Standard Oil Company can't put him out of business. I intend to follow his example."

S. Elliott Wilson, the man who cut the price of oil to five cents, admits that he [illegible].

Mr. Wilson would not admit that the oil he sold was delivered by the Oil Trust, but he did admit that he traded with the Standard Oil Company. He said that he intended to do business in his own way and at his own prices. Mr. Wilson would [illegible] any [illegible] from the Standard Oil Company for handling their product.

JUDGE DROPS DEAD AS RETURNS COME IN

Colorado Springs, April 11.—Charles Rosenthal, an election judge, dropped dead in Republican headquarters recently after delivering returns from Precinct 1 of Ward 6, which gave Hamlin a majority of eighty-three over Brooks. Rosenthal was a Hamlin man. Rosenthal weighed over 200 pounds and is believed to have been subject to heart trouble.

F. OF A. DELEGATES MAY NUMBER 450

Big Gathering Expected at Massachusetts Court Convention in May.

Springfield, April 11.—It is expected that 450 delegates will be in attendance at the twentieth annual convention of the Massachusetts Court of the Foresters of America to be held in this city May 19, 20 and 21. The convention was held here three years ago, and the delegates were given such a warm welcome that they were glad to accept the invitation to come again.

The district here includes Springfield, Westfield, Northampton, Indian Orchard, Holyoke and Chicopee, and these towns and cities will aid in making the gathering successful in every way. The order has been making big strides and is in excellent financial condition. There are 253 courts in the State and 35,000 members notwithstanding the fact that the French speaking Foresters seceded a few years ago.

Among the prominent Foresters who are expected to attend the convention are: Supreme Chief Ranger John J. O'Grady and Supreme Secretary [illegible], New York; Past Supreme Chief Ranger William A. Hogan, Lowell; Supreme Recording Secretary P. J. Brown, Worcester; Deputy Supreme Chief Ranger for Massachusetts Henry F. McManus, Fitchburg; Past Grand Chief Rangers E. B. O'Brien, Lynn, John W. Slattery, Westboro, A. J. Connolly and Mark Stone, Boston; Past Grand Supreme Chief Ranger M. J. Phelan, Lynn. D. J. Kane of this city is chairman of the entertainment committee.

Not Only as a Catarrh Remedy, But as an All-Round Family Medicine.

Mr. Webber, of Somerville, Mass.

Mr. Edward O. Webber, 84 Broadway, Columbia Building, Somerville, Mass., writes:

"I suffered last winter with a severe case of la grippe, which completely prostrated me. Having heard the value of Peruna I sent for a bottle and used it carefully, according to directions.

"I was pleased to find that it greatly relieved me and within a few days I felt much better, which was a blessed relief, for I had felt weak and sick all over. I cannot praise it too highly. I have used it in my family ever since and have recommended it to friends, and find that it never disappoints. It is a wonderful medicine to restore lost strength."

Mrs. Russell, of So. Sutton, N. H.

Mrs. H. E. Russell, Box 94, South Sutton, N. H., writes:

"I have been troubled for sixteen years with kidney and bladder trouble, and have taken all kinds of medicine for the trouble without relief.

"I at last saw Dr. Hartman's advertisement, and I wrote to him describing my case. He pronounced it chronic catarrh of the bladder and urinary organs. He advised me to take Peruna, which I did according to directions. After taking one bottle I felt much better. I have taken six bottles and I am now cured of that old trouble of sixteen years' standing. I advise all that are troubled in the way I have been to take Peruna and be cured as I am. I feel better than I have for ten years. I shall always keep Peruna in the house. I cannot praise it enough, for it has been a God-send to me."

Mrs. Avery, of Leominster, Mass.

Mrs. Martha Avery, 28 Graham St., Leominster, Mass., writes:

"I have been thinking of writing to you for some time in regard to Peruna, which I have been taking for three years. Four years ago I had nervous prostration. I employed several doctors. One would say I had catarrh of the stomach and bowels, another nervousness and another enlargement of the liver.

"My stomach was in bad shape. There was nothing which seemed to do me much good. I tried other remedies, but did not gain any flesh until I commenced taking your Peruna, which built me right up. I have taken several bottles but have not taken any now for about six weeks.

"I am 73 years old. I never expect to be entirely well or young again, but I am thankful for what Peruna has done for me. I shall praise Peruna wherever I go.

Mr. Hawkins, of Westerly, R. I.

Mr. Wm. F. Hawkins, 12 West St., Westerly, R. I., writes:

"I wish to give my testimony in favor of Peruna as a tonic. I have used the same for catarrh and can recommend it to all who are troubled in that way. If any word of mine will benefit any person, I am willing for you to make use of the same."

Mrs. Johnson, of Augusta, Me.

Mrs. C. E. Johnson, 3 Bennett St., Augusta, Maine, writes:

"I have been so greatly benefited by your treatment that I feel that I am cured.

"I can say that Peruna is the greatest catarrh remedy in the world, for I tried many remedies before taking Peruna, and none seemed to do me any good.

"I thank you for the interest you have taken in my case."

Mrs. Corning, of New Hampshire.

Mrs. S. L. Corning, R. F. D. 13, North Londonderry, N. H., writes:

"I have been afflicted with catarrh of the head, throat and ears for seven years and was very nervous. I was treated by two doctors, who tried for several weeks to cure me, but they failed and then I gave up hope.

"I continued to be troubled until I read your pamphlet and wrote to you about it. You advised a treatment which I took until I felt well again. I took nine bottles of Peruna and cannot praise it too highly."

Mrs. Mary A. Brown, 48 Wells Ave., Dorchester, Mass., writes:

"Every one that looks at me says, 'I never saw you look so well as you do now.' I tell them that I have been taking your medicine. I will always Praise Peruna and Manalin."

Mrs. Smith of West Newbury, Vt.

Mrs. Mary Smith, West Newbury, Vt., writes:

"I feel that it is due to you that I tell you how much your medicine and the advice you have given me have done for me. I have been in poor health for the past ten years.

"At times I have been so low that I have been told I could not live many days. I have had a bad cough and difficult breathing, and I could not keep from taking cold.

"Last fall I took another cold, but instead of it going to my lungs, as it had seemed to do before, it seemed to be affecting my head, throat and stomach. For weeks I could not breathe through my nose. I saw in your almanac what Peruna had done for some one similarly afflicted. I got a bottle and began to take it.

"I then wrote to you and followed the directions you gave me, and now I am so glad that I did. For the past four months I have been better than for years. I keep Peruna by me, and when I have taken a little cold I take a few doses.

"I would not be without it. I am over 65 years old and I never expected to be so well as I am."

Mr Nagel, of Meriden, Conn

Mr. H. W. Nagel, 63 Church St., Meriden, Conn., writes:

"For several years I had been troubled with catarrh of the stomach. After trying about everything else, I was advised to try Peruna. I could not eat any solid food for some time; now I can eat most anything. I have taken several bottles of Peruna and Manalin and am entirely cured. I thank you for your kind advice."

Mr. Toutloff, of Portland, Me.

Mr. Clement Toutloff, 11 Myrtle St., Portland, Maine, writes:

"I suffered with catarrh of the head and let the disease run on until it became unbearable.

"One day I picked up one of your pamphlets, and reading the many testimonials I became convinced that Peruna might do me some good. I will say it is a wonderful medicine, for it has given me untold relief. I have taken only a bottle and a half and feel like a new man.

"I do earnestly recommend Peruna to each and every person who is afflicted with that terrible disease, catarrh."

For free book of testimonials address The Peruna Drug Manufacturing Company, Columbus, Ohio.

Mr. Cobb, of Deering, Me.

Mr. Frank Cobb, 175 Summit St., Deering, Me., writes:

"I was troubled for a number of years with catarrh in my head and tried many so-called cures, but without benefit.

"I wrote Dr. Hartman for advice and he prescribed Peruna for me. I took Peruna and Manalin according to directions and am happy to say it helped me at once.

"I feel better than I have felt for many years, thanks to Peruna."

Mr. Richmond, of No. Adams, Mass.

Mr. W. Ellsworth Richmond, 40 Cady St., North Adams, Mass., writes:

"I think Peruna is a valuable medicine. It has cured me of a bad case of catarrh of the stomach after using only eight bottles. Accept my thanks for your kind advice. Peruna will always be found in my house."

FORM HUMAN CHAIN; BABY DIES IN FIRE

MOTHER RESCUES TWO

After Mrs. Norman Reed of Revere had saved her two eldest children, Reva and Tessie, from a fire which was sweeping through the family cottage, No. 20 Beachland avenue, yesterday, four men, forming a human chain, vainly tried to rescue Edna [illegible] baby of the [illegible] room, the men discovered their mistake too late. By the time they started for [illegible] crisp in the flames [illegible].

The blaze started from the kitchen range which Mr. Reed had kindled before he left for his work as check clerk at the Crawford House, Boston. Mrs. Reed started downstairs to prepare breakfast when she ran into a mass of flames and smoke. Rushing back to the bedroom to rescue her three children, she became frantic. Fearing that she would be hemmed in on all sides, she grabbed two of the children and forced her way to the street.

About the time she reached the street Lieut. Spencer G. Hawkins of the Metropolitan Park Police and patrolmen J. Bernard Marshall and Maurice W. Finn of the State Police saw the blaze from a car on which they were riding to the station. They jumped from the car and rushed to the house. It was then burning fiercely.

The mother, in excited ejaculations, directed the men to bedroom on the second floor. They seized the veranda railing, climbed the piazza posts and were soon at the roof of the eighteen-foot structure. They were joined by Dennis F. Flynn, a citizen, who was standing in the crowd.

Forcing their way into the smoke-filled room they swept the clothing from the bed and dropped it to the ground while the terrified crowd sent up cheer after cheer. But the child was not to be found in the clothing and then the sudden silence was broken by a shriek from the mother. She told the officers that the child was not in the front room, but in the room adjoining. Again the officers tried to make their way into the flaming structure, but it was too late.

The officers were not alone in their brave work. A woman named Annie McGee of No. 34 [illegible] made an unsuccessful attempt to reach the child. She was on the back side of the house and regardless of her own peril she smashed a window, severely cutting her hands, in a struggle to reach the child. But she was forced back by the dense smoke.

We include with every cake of the "IDEAL" Stamping Preparation a new-idea Distributing Pad, directions for the use of which are included with the outfit. And the whole complete set of patterns and improved stamping outfit costs you nothing whatsoever. All you have to do is just to mail us 25 cents in all to-day for a club of only two one-year trial subscriptions to the great national monthly, AMERICAN HOME MAGAZINE. This fine, new periodical is backed by all the unlimited resources of a colossal publishing organization—comprising, as it does, three of the greatest monthly magazines of their kind published, and, in addition, eight great metropolitan dailies, scattered over the breadth of the land. It is now the management's intention to make their new monthly, AMERICAN HOME MAGAZINE, as distinctive as their newspapers; in other words, the greatest magazine of its kind published. Therefore, there will appear in this new monthly the great $75,000.00 editorials, written by one of the highest paid newspaper men in the world, in addition to the wonderful art features, the provokingly funny cartoons, the screamingly odd Happy Hooligan, Buster Brown, And Her Name Was Maud, and the dozen and one other marvellous creations of those master minds of mirth and fun—Opper, Dirks, Bunny, Outcault and all the rest. Of the magazine's great editorial writers only a few of the dozens upon dozens can here be mentioned. Among these are ELLA WHEELER WILCOX, the most brilliant woman in contemporary American life; DINKELSPIEL—the inimitable—the man who has set all the world a-laughing; MAURICE MAETERLINCK, Belgium's foremost living philosopher and litterateur; CLARA MORRIS, the noted actress, who will write of life on the stage and of the busy world; PROFESSOR GARRETT P. SERVISS, who has magically transformed the mysteries of science into tales of marvellous romance, and BEATRICE FAIRFAX, the most brilliant, cleverest woman who has ever written on love, romance and the things of the heart. These are but A FEW of the master minds who will contribute regularly to the great new monthly. For the strange, the bizarre, the unlike, the fascinating, read the brilliantly interesting new AMERICAN HOME MAGAZINE. And remember that—for a limited time—for sending us a club of two one-year trial subscriptions—costing in all only 25 cents—you receive the splendid embroidery and stamping outfit described above—ABSOLUTELY FREE. Therefore, do not delay, but send your quarter to-day—at once—both for the two one-year trial subscriptions and this complete outfit. Address AMERICAN HOME MAGAZINE, Dept. S. Unlettered Girl Who in Hypnotic State Talks in Many Languages

WINNIFRED M. KNIGHT

GIRL IN TRANCE SPEAKS IN STRANGE TONGUES AT REVIVAL

Farmer's Daughter Amazes Religious Gathering Led by Evangelists; Psycholoists Watch Strange Case.

PORTLAND, Me., April 11.—Walking back and forth in the aisle, her head erect and her arms folded, apparently unconscious of everything said to her, fourteen-year-old Winifred M. Knight, a school girl in short dresses and a farmer's daughter, has startled the entire State by getting up several times at evangelistic meetings in the little chapel at Newburg, Me., and shouting strange words in a half dozen languages, all of them foreign to her.

The attention of Dr. William James, professor at Harvard, and other noted psychologists, has been called to the case.

For three successive nights the girl has repeated her strange [illegible] and on [illegible] when [illegible] she declared she remembered nothing about it. The meetings are [illegible] hundreds from all sections of the adjacent country, their curiosity aroused by the stories they have heard, are flocking nightly and fighting at the doors for admission to the chapel.

Girl Acts Strangely.

The town of Newburg is twenty miles from Bangor. [illegible] week ago two [illegible] evangelists [illegible] Rev. [illegible] Wood [illegible] Morrow [illegible] the little town [illegible] series of [illegible] meetings. For the first few nights [illegible] happened. Winifred Knight [illegible] of the front seats at every meeting.

It was about the middle of the week when the girl began to act strangely. She arose from her seat one evening while one of the evangelists was in the middle of a sermon and drew herself erect in the aisle. The preacher stopped his sermon. The congregation looked on in amazement. For a few moments there was perfect silence.

Slowly folding her arms across her breast and with solemn step, the girl started toward the pulpit. Some of those down in front noticed that her eyes were closed. Yet she walked straight at least a dozen feet and then, turning and facing the congregation, she shouted almost at the top of her voice:

"He is calling thee and why wilt thou forsake him?"

A friend of the girl, fearing she had suddenly lost her reason, stepped out and caught Winifred by the arm, suggesting that she return to her seat. Breaking away from him Winifred continued her walk through the aisle and as she walked it is said she kept shouting in foreign languages, first one language and then another. The service broke up and the girl was taken home.

"Why, Winnie, what was the matter?" she was asked after reaching home.

"I don't understand," the girl replied. "What was the matter? When?"

"Why did you act that way at service—get up from your seat and address the congregation?"

"I never did anything of the kind. Surely you must be mistaken."

Winifred Knight declared she could not remember a single thing that happened at the service beyond that she had a vague recollection of what the evangelist had said.

"There must be some mistake," she insisted.

"He Is Calling Thee."

Next evening it was noticed that the girl was again in a front seat and some time before the service [illegible]. She sat stock still, apparently [illegible] interested in the sermon until just [illegible] preacher was about to close. Then [illegible] up again and repeated her strange [illegible] of the previous evening. Several persons left their seats and spoke to her as she passed through the aisle, but the girl made no reply.

She simply walked back and forth, shouting:

"He is calling thee and why wilt thou forsake him?"

[illegible] she changed [illegible] the evening before. Many [illegible] in the chapel insisted that they [illegible] some words [illegible] and still other words in Greek and Latin. One of her sentences in Greek is said to have been:

"He will appear."

The evangelists profess to be as much mystified at the girl's action as the girl's friends and members of her family are. The parents say Winifred never studied any language but English. Dr. James, a professor at Harvard, is quoted here as having said regarding the case:

"It might be called a medium trance. It is not an induced condition only so far as social conditions make it so. The subject herself is possessed of another knowledge, a second knowledge, which comes [illegible] control during the manifestation. It might [illegible] be called auto [illegible] in which the subject hypnotizes herself."

Professor James, at his home in Cambridge, when questioned about the matter last night, refused to deny the interview attributed to him, and said:

"I have nothing whatever to say—not a word. If the matter is out, probably the girl herself gave it out. But I do not want to be concerned."

5 HURT; 1200 GIRLS IN FACTORY PANIC

Slipping of Fly-Wheel Explodes Steam Pipes at the T. G. Plant Shoe Shop.

Operations will be resumed to-morrow at the Thomas G. Plant shoe factory at the corner of Centre and Bickford streets, Jamaica Plain, where the slipping off of a fly wheel in the engine room, followed by explosion of steam pipes, caused a panic among the 1,200 girls employed there and injuries to five people. In all 2,700 hands are on the factory payroll.

The injured:

Estes, Davis, No. 9 Albany street, scalded about legs and body.

F[illegible], Mary, stitcher, hands cut.

McLeod, Heath, of Dedham, son of Superintendent McLeod of the factory, chest hurt by flying debris.

The following girls fainted in the panic and were carried out by their associates: Mary Bussey, Katherine Ward, Mary [illegible], Julia [illegible], Jessie Leakley, El[illegible], Mary J[illegible], Rosa Cavanaugh and Sophia Lindeners.

Damage of $15,000.

The damage to the engine room machinery, to the building and to shoes and shoe stock wet by steam and water is estimated at $15,000.

Investigation has revealed no direct cause for the break, except a probable defect in the fly wheel casting. The accident came at 10 o'clock. After the big factory had been emptied work was stopped for the day. Repairs were begun as soon as possible and it is expected that work will start to-morrow morning.

At the time of the explosion only Engineer Ronan and McLeod were in the engine room. Without warning the rapidly revolving fly-wheel slipped from its journal and crashed against the feed steam and water pipes, causing the steam pipes to explode.

The explosion shook the factory, blew out some windows and sent steam driving through the plant, to the terror of the employes, especially the 1,200 girls.

Rush for Stairways.

On the fifth and sixth floors were about 700 girls, working as stitchers, skivers and polishers. The more terrified ones made a wild break for the stairways, despite the efforts of cooler heads to calm them. In this rush some girls were carried off their feet and others fainted.

Men on the first floor rushed into the engine room, which is an auxiliary building at the junction of the two wings of the plant, and found Engineer Ronan and McLeod. Ronan had a bad scalp wound and McLeod was bruised severely on the body. They were attended by Dr. Davis, the factory physician, and then were sent home.

Ronan and McLeod were the only ones in the engine room at the time of the accident and their escape from death is considered miraculous.

Jump Out of Windows.

Some passer-by, hearing the noise and seeing the escaping steam, [illegible] in a fire alarm. The arrival of the apparatus excited the girls again and it was with difficulty that some were convinced that the place was not afire. [illegible] and Deputy Fire Chief McDonough quickly ordered the apparatus back to its houses, seeing that no fire was burning or even threatening.

Everyone got out or was taken out of the place finally. Some girls on the first floor would not take time to go out by the door, but jumped out the windows to the sidewalk below.

Pimples Will Leave You

In 5 Days You Can Get Rid of All Skin Eruptions by the New Calcium Sulphide Wafers.

Trial Package to Prove It Sent Free

If you are one of the unfortunates who can't get away from your pimples and you have tried almost everything under heaven to get rid of them, take a few of Stuart's Calcium Wafers every day. Do that steadily for a few days, and in less than a week look at yourself in the mirror.

You will then say that Stuart's Calcium Wafers are a wonder in getting rid of all eruptions.

These wonderful little workers contain the most effective blood purifier ever discovered, [illegible].

No matter what your trouble is, whether pimples, [illegible], blackheads, rash, tetter, [illegible], you can solemnly [illegible] upon Stuart's Calcium Wafers as never failing.

Stuart's Calcium Wafers have cured boils in three days and the worst cases of skin [illegible] in a week. Every particle of impurity is driven out of your system completely, never to return, and it is done without deranging your system in the least.

Most treatments for the blood and for skin eruptions are miserably slow in their results, and besides, many of them are poisonous. Stuart's Calcium Wafers contain no poison or drug of any kind; they are absolutely harmless, and yet do work which cannot fail to surprise you.

Don't go around with a humiliating, disgusting [illegible] heads on your [illegible]. A face covered over with these [illegible] things makes people turn away from you, and breeds failure in your life work. Stop it. Read what an Iowa man said when he woke up one morning and found he had a new face:

"By George, I never saw anything like it. There I've been for three years trying to get rid of pimples and blackheads, and guess I used everything under the sun. I used Stuart's Calcium Wafers for just [illegible] and this morning every blessed [illegible] and I can't find a blackhead. I could write you a volume of thanks, I am so grateful to you."

Just send us your name and address in full, to-day, and we will send you a trial package of Stuart's Calcium Wafers, free to test. After you have tried the sample and been convinced that all we say is true you will go to your nearest druggist and get a 50c box and be cured of your facial trouble. They are in tablet form, and no trouble whatever to take. You go about your work as usual, and there you are,—cured and happy.

Send us your name and address today and we will at once send you by mail a sample package free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 175 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

LABOR MAN SCORES TAFT'S CANDIDACY

'Our Objection Unrelenting, Insurmountble,' Says Charles J. French.

Concord, N. H., April 11.—Declaring that "it should be known, and known now, that our objection to Taft's candidacy is unrelenting, insurmountable and determined, even to his defeat at the polls in November," Charles J. French, president of the New Hampshire Branch of the American Federation of Labor, to-day issued a circular on "Taft and the Labor [illegible]," which is being sent to every labor organization in the Granite State. In part President French has this to say:

"The gravest and most momentous situation that has ever confronted the work[illegible] every wage earner and every sympathizer with our cause, should [illegible] as one man in his might to meet the [illegible].

"Secretary of War William H. Taft, now an eager aspirant for the presidency of the United States, [illegible] as a judge on the Federal bench became the [illegible] of [illegible] labor decisions, involving the boycott, the [illegible], the strike, [illegible] commitment for contempt of court, etc., which [illegible] with their accompanying extensions and constructions of law laid the foundations and formed the general basis and chief legal precedent for such formidable embarrassment and perilous complications as now beset our fraternity [illegible].

"Without attempting to hold 'Candidate' Taft wholly responsible for 'Judge' Taft, wholly accountable for the dangerous straits unto which the cause of labor has been forced,—the millions of wage-workers, organized and unorganized, throughout the country, have no escape or recourse of action except to hold Candidate Taft as the one present objective point of their self-defence.

"This is an important question that should now be brought home to every branch and division of labor organization, for immediate consideration and action. Our objection to Taft is [illegible]. Labor unionists ordinarily support the candidates of their respective political parties, but, in this case, the [illegible] is far paramount to any mere party affiliation. Such a candidate, whether he be a Republican or Democrat, [illegible] opposed upon high and [illegible] ground.

"It should be known, and known now, that our objection to Taft's candidacy is unrelenting, insurmountable and determined, even to his defeat at the polls in November."

APPEALS TO BUREAU TO LOCATE HUSBAND

Gloucester Captain Strangely Dropped From View on Way to Boston Wharf.

Missing from home since March 30 and believed by relatives to be ill, perhaps in some hospital, unable to send word of his whereabouts and condition, the aid of the Bureau for Tracing Lost Persons of the Boston Sunday American has been asked in locating Captain Stephen Black of Gloucester, skipper of the fishing schooner Lillian, whose wife has worried herself into a serious illness over his absence and whose two little children are crying constantly for him to come home.

Black left Gloucester with the intention of coming to Boston to rejoin his boat, which was then tied up at T Wharf. He was accompanied by a friend. Black excused himself to the friend in the North Station and went out, saying he would return in a few moments. He has since been missing. His vessel sailed without him.

John Driscoll Fisher of Derry, N. H., for example, is twenty-four years old, but he cannot ever recall seeing his parents. The young man was placed in an asylum in Taunton when he was two years old and subsequently was adopted by Mrs. A. B. Fisher, then a resident of Taunton, [illegible] living now at Reading, Mass. He ran away from Mrs. Fisher when he was fifteen. He has never been able to learn much about his parents, but believes they are still living and probably somewhere in New England. He asks that any information regarding them be sent to him in care of the general delivery, Derry, N. H.

John L. Frisbee of No. 182 Broadway, Everett, would like to hear from any persons who worked at the Boston Navy Yard between the years 1872 and 1883. Mr. Frisbee says he has something of interest to them.

TALKS ON TEETH

By G. Gordon Martin Incorporated

How To Preserve The Teeth

Every man and woman is given two sets of teeth. The first they lose in childhood. The second they lose through misuse in manhood or old age. Ill-health and ugliness is the penalty one pays for the neglect of one of the most important parts of the body—the teeth.

Much has been written upon the development and maintenance of the teeth, for much depends upon the condition of the teeth. Your health can be affected or your appearance marred by the teeth.

The teeth should be cleaned every night and, if possible, every morning. Acid accumulating about the teeth is the cause of their decay. Decay means providing a breeding place in the mouth for bacilli, which menace the health, and an insufficient chewing of the food, which brings in its train indigestion and a consequent lack of energy to properly do one's work.

Doctor Charles A. Brackett is the great authority for the following statement: "Your teeth should be cleaned at regular intervals by a dentist." In a recent lecture before the Harvard Medical School he commended a monthly visit to the dentist.

When your looks are marred by poor teeth and you suffer from the lack of them your case is not without a remedy. Our Alveolar System of Dentistry makes it possible, provided you have two or more teeth in either jaw, to build up a complete set of new teeth almost as strong and handsome as natural teeth. Our book on the Alveolar Process tells you about it, and we will gladly mail it free. Our process has been used with remarkable success all over America. It involves no surgical operation, boring or cutting, and is no more painful than any ordinary dentistry, but very much more effective in its results.

We will examine your teeth free, and will be glad to tell you just what it would cost to fill your decayed teeth, make firm the loose ones or build up a new set of teeth where teeth are missing. We have letters from people all over the East whom we have successfully treated.

MOROCCAN WOMEN AND CHILDREN SLAIN

DEMAND INVESTIGATION

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Paris, April 11—Details of the recent engagement of the French troops with tribesmen in Morocco, describing the killing of hundreds of Moors, as well as many women and children, are being received here with feelings of mingled horror and indignation that civilized warfare should degenerate into plain massacre.

Advices from Tangier state that when the French troops went into action the natives were engaged in a [illegible] religious picnic, at the thatched hut of Sidi El Ghloumi, a holy man. When the shells from the French guns began to [illegible] above the heads of the natives they [illegible] not move, being firm in [illegible] Sidi El Ghloumi [illegible] Heaven would prevent them from [illegible].

Natives Dropped Like Flies.

When the French found the range the natives dropped like flies in a sudden frost. The natives then fled in wild panic. The shelling continued with deadly effect, killing men, women, boys and girls and babes in arms.

So stunned were the peasants at the terrible vengeance of the white men that they did not return for their dead and wounded until next day.

The Al-Moghreb Al-Arsa, a paper published at Tangier, states that these details are absolutely true, all official reports to the contrary. The French Government, however, has the report of General D'Amade, who stated that the Moors numbering 1,000 foot and 1,000 horse, took the offensive and fought with fanaticism, which naturally caused them to suffer great loss.

General D'Amade reports that "the native tents and herds fell into the hands of the French, but he insists there was no pillaging.

Investigation Called For.

The outcome of the latest dispatches, charging that children and even babes in arms were slaughtered [illegible] freely speculated upon and the action of M. Jaures, who recently charged that the French troops were massacring natives, is awaited with feverish interest by both those opposed to France's methods of "policing" Morocco and those in favor of the movement of the troops.

M. Jaure's statement that there was no warfare, but simply slaughter, was officially denied, but the government will likely be called upon to make an investigation of these recent charges.

Dear Sir—Am in receipt of your letter asking to use my letter as a testimonial. Indeed I have no objection, for I really think your Vaucaire Tablets are almost magical. I can't say too much in praise of them. I have improved wonderfully in every way, especially my female health and my nervous system. The two dollars I have spent for the Vaucaire Tablets have done me more good than hundreds I have spent in the past with physicians who did me very little good if any. I feel so well now and enjoy every moment of my life. My daily duties are a pleasure instead of a task. I will gladly and conscientiously recommend your Vaucaire Galega Tablets. Am enclosing money order for another box of them. Please send them at once, as I am almost out.

Very sincerely,

MARQUIS' SONS TO STUDY AT HARVARD

Two Scions of the Famous House Headfort to Be Trained in America.

MOTHER WAS AN ACTRESS

Two young Irish Lords are to come to Harvard University some day for a course of study before they enter Oxford University in England.

They are Lord Bective, six years of age, and Lord William Taylour, four years of age, sons of the Marquis and Marchioness of Headfort.

The Marquis and Marchioness are now in Chicago.

The Marquis, whose estates in the south of Ireland are of vast extent, and who is [illegible] the most democratic [illegible] Ireland," lives "on the soil" and is personally known to every one of his 1,000 tenants.

The two little sons of the Marquis, whose marriage to Rosie Boote, the musical comedy actress, caused his resignation from the exclusive Horse Guards and brought him into disfavor with King Edward, are credited with having so fascinated [illegible] that he not only forgave [illegible] the so-called mesalliance, but received the Marchioness into high favor.

Studying Under a Tutor.

Lord Bective, who will succeed to the Headfort title and estates, is at present with his brother, Lord Taylour, studying under a tutor whose mission it is to prepare the lads for Eton College.

7:00 a. m.—Rise and bathe.
7:30 a. m.—Exercise calisthenics directed by tutor; prayers.
8:00 a. m.—Breakfast.
8:30 a. m.—Pony ride across country.
9:30 a. m.—Study, readin', ritin' an' 'rithmetic.
12 (noon)—Luncheon.
1 p. m.—Visit the Marquis and Marchioness.
2 p. m.—Study, history, geography, grammar.
3 p. m.—Play.
4 p. m.—Tea in the nursery.
5 p. m.—Social drawing room call.
6 p. m.—Dress for dinner.
7 p. m.—Dinner in nursery.
7:30 p. m.—Evening prayers.
8:00 p. m.—Bed.

Destined for the Army.

Little Lord Bective, the heir to the estates, has his father's blue eyes and blonde hair and is a typical representative of the lithe-limbed, clean-built line of six-footers, well-known in the British army.

He is a sober-minded, earnest-faced little chap, whose pointed inquiries into the meaning of entail laws and their whyness have caused his dark-eyed, handsome mother to fear at times that he takes life a bit too seriously for a six-year-old. However, to see the same youngster on a wild-eyed Irish pony when there is no groom in the immediate vicinity is enough to remove all doubts as to the physical vigor of the future marquis.

Little Lord Taylour, dark-haired and black-eyed, the image of his mother, the Marchioness, is destined, of course, for the army. He will go to Sandhurst and probably will be scooted out to India to make a name for himself among the Afridis of the northern border, that is unless something more important happens [illegible] at the time.

Lord Taylour's future is indicated in the toys he busies himself with. He can convert a Connemara sandhill into a raised map of the South African country from the Modder river to Belmont, with every kopje built up, and showing Magersfontein and the river bed where Lord Roberts cornered the wily Boer and ended the war.

All over the [illegible] Lord Taylour distributes his artillery, sprinkles his men in open order, which somebody has told him Methuen did not do, and in other ways shows that he is the son of a soldier.

The Marchioness is petite, exceedingly dainty and charming of feature, a brunette of the brunettes and, before everything else, a devoted mother.

Delighted With New York.

"I was almost afraid to leave the little folks," she declared; "but, after all, they are so well taken care of and so anxious for me to enjoy my trip that I should not worry at all. Then there always is the cable, you know. One may make assurance doubly sure in a few hours.

"I really have found my visit charming so far. I was especially delighted with New York and we have met some charming people there. Neither of us ever was in Chicago before, and we are going to see all we can in twenty-four hours. Our itinerary includes most of the show places. From Chicago we go to California, perhaps staying a short time in Denver on the way, and then home by way of Canada. It is the jolliest trip we ever have had."

YANKEES SUFFER LOSSES IN FIRES

Special Cable to Hearst's News Service.

Genoa, April 11.—A panic in which many Americans suffered loss of money and baggage occurred to-day when the Aquila and Leon D'Oro Hotels burned. The origin of the fire is somewhat veiled in mystery and it had made quite a deal of headway before the attempt to fight it became effective. The Americans in the hotels were the coolest of all the guests, but so close were the escapes of some of them that they had to flee in the scantiest of garments, many of them in their nightrobes. No fatalities have been reported.

NINE PHILIPPINE OUTLAWS KILLED

Manila, April 11.—Nine outlaws of the band led by Lingay were killed by a detachment sent out from Bayombong. The outlaws brutally murdered a policeman and when pursued by troops offered resistance. The band will be pursued until broken up.

NEW LAW TO MAKE DIVORCE EASIER

London, April 11.—To make divorce easier in England is the object of a bill to be introduced this session of Parliament by Horatio Bottomley, a well-known financier and journalist. Divorces are granted under the existing law on very limited grounds, and there is a growing movement in favor of making a divorce legal on the ground of the insanity or criminality of either party.

"My bill," says Mr. Bottomley, "would enable persons married to incurably insane or to convicts sentenced to ten years' penal servitude or more to obtain divorce decrees on those grounds alone."

There are 70,000 married people in this country who are incurably insane, and the proposed new law would release the unfortunate husbands and wives who are tied for life to hopeless lunatics.

WOMEN'S CONGRESS LIMITS SPEECHES

Rome, April 11.—Italian women are eagerly preparing for the first women's congress ever held in this country, which is to take place in Rome during this month. Unlike similar gatherings in more "advanced" countries, woman suffrage and other political questions will not be discussed, the subjects for discussion being restricted to such things as education, home industries and charities.

A remarkable rule decreed by the authorities is that reports read by delegates shall be limited to 300 words. An American woman married to an Italian will preside over the charities section of the congress.

TWO YANKEES ARE RECEIVED BY POPE

Rome, April 11.—William Bailey Howland, the New York publisher, and Robert Watchorn, commissioner of emigration at New York, were received by the Pope to-day. Mr. Watchorn informed the pontiff that in 1906, 700,000 Catholic emigrants landed in New York and of this number 300,000 were Italians. The Pope was greatly surprised at these high figures.

Important to All Women
Readers of This Paper.

Women are as subject to kidney trouble as men, which fact is often overlooked.

Many women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease.

If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition, they will cause the other organs to become diseased.

You may suffer a great deal with pain in the back, bearing-down feelings, headache and loss of ambition.

Poor health makes you nervous, irritable and may be despondent; it makes any one so.

But thousands of irritable, nervous, tired and broken-down women have restored their health and strength by the use of Swamp-Root, the great Kidney, Liver and Bladder Remedy.

Swamp-Root brings new life and activity to the kidneys, the cause of such troubles.

Many send for a sample bottle to see what Swamp-Root, the great Kidney, Liver and Bladder Remedy, will do for them. Every reader of this paper, who has not already tried it, may address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and receive sample bottle free by mail.

Decadance Cannot Ruin America, Says Balfour

By Lady Henry Somerset

[illegible] April 11.—Mr. Balfour has been giving a lecture on decadence, in which he has said some very wise and witty things. He pointed out how advanced science had changed the whole moral aspect of civilized life.

The problem of decadence, he said, was one that faced every great civilization. It had been present in Rome, it had been present in China, but the chief idea of decadence, he said, applies mainly to the failings of the governing class, or at least of dominant and wealthy classes.

[illegible] prosperity [illegible] often supposed to sap the fibre of the [illegible] and prosperous, and this is in keeping with biological science, which makes competition [illegible] of fitness.

[illegible] he pointed out were [illegible] wider diffusion of wealth, so [illegible] of choice was larger and [illegible] for autocrats and [illegible] the nation [illegible] view of A[illegible] [illegible] Roman Empire [illegible] eighty millions of the United States are not [illegible] decadent few and [illegible] may be called decadence, and a decadence [illegible]

It is a great subject, and one which [illegible] thought for its consideration is sorely needed at this moment.

GENERAL BOOTH IS 79 YEARS OLD

London, April 11.—An immense audience gave an enthusiastic reception to General Booth, head of the Salvation Army at Queen's Hall, the occasion being the celebration of his seventy-ninth birthday.

General Booth was vigorous and hale, and although he had been working strenuously since 9 o'clock in the morning, with the exception of forty minutes for lunch, he made a speech which occupied an hour and a half in its delivery, in which he reviewed his life.

He reiterated that his successor had been chosen so that there will be no interregnum in the leadership of the army. He said: "But I am not dead yet. I mean to go on living just as long as ever I can.

NEW GIANT GERMAN WARSHIP LAUNCHED

Kiel, Germany, April 11.—The armored cruiser Bluecher was launched to-day in the presence of Prince Henry of Prussia and many high officials of the admiralty.

Virtually a battleship in all except name, this latest addition to the armored cruisers of [illegible] launched from the stocks of the imperial navy yard, is built entirely of steel with a displacement of 15,000 tons. The cost of construction totals $6,915,000, of which $4,625,000 will be spent on the hull and machinery, while her artillery will cost $2,125,000 and her torpedo armament $165,000. Her complement will total 730 officers and men. Her contract speed is twenty-five knots an hour. She will carry no fewer than 10 11-inch guns, 46 feet in length, throwing a 660 pound missile, besides a large number of transformed 3½ inch quick firers, discharging a 26-pound shell, for defence against torpedo attacks.

I can assure you we have some wonderful officers in the navy. America should feel proud of them. I myself feel proud of the men we have, and I am glad that the Pacific coast is doing them honor.

"I feel rather put out in regard to the statements in certain papers that I had met with a severe accident several days ago. It was such a trivial thing that I had forgotten to mention it to my wife, and I was shocked when I saw what was in the papers about it. A man accidentally bumped against my sore knee one morning, and for a short while it pained me severely, but it was all over in fifteen minutes.

"Since I was first attacked with rheumatism my life has never been in danger. The only trouble was that I suffered a great deal. I have not had a particle of fever, and I am taking no drugs except the regular treatments given here. It will be the same [illegible] of old in a few days."

CIVIL SERVICE FOR NEW STREET HEADS

Decision of State Board Is Disappointment to Republicans

SOME TO GET PROMOTIONS

All deputy superintendents [illegible] Street Department, which [illegible] created Tuesday under the [illegible] C. Emerson, must be [illegible] the civil service list [illegible] examination, according [illegible] last night to a [illegible] by Chairman Charles W. [illegible] Massachusetts Civil Service [illegible] only possible [illegible] the [illegible] case of the [illegible] of the department [illegible] Mr. W[illegible] the superintendent of streets may desire to make any such promotions, may be given non-competitive examination for deputyships.

This decision will be a severe blow to several prominent Republicans, who are candidates for the deputy superintendencies, which will pay from $2,000 to $3,000 a year.

The experience of the past three months led the Mayor to the conclusion that he must find the right kind of men, except in a few instances, outside the city's service. For this reason he was prepared, it is said, to have the superintendent of streets name his several deputies and then ask the Civil Service Commission to certify their appointment.

TELLS OF FOIBLES OF 18TH CENTURY

There will be a lecture and entertainment in the Hotel Tuileries, No. 270 Commonwealth avenue, tomorrow afternoon, commencing at 3:30 o'clock, under the auspices of the Out Patient Department of the Boston Consumptives' Hospital, the proceeds of which will be turned over to the [illegible] of the institution.

[illegible] Abbott, who will lecture, has chosen as his theme "Foibles and Furbelows of the Eighteenth Century." His topic will be illustrated by "La Grande Pandore," a modern life-sized adaptation of a famous eighteenth century fashion doll. This fascinating court beauty, appearing in many costumes, will effectively demonstrate the luxury, eccentricities and splendors of the time.

The patronesses of the affair include Mrs. Frederick Ayer, Mrs. Alfred Bowditch, Mrs. [illegible], Mrs. R. S. Clark, Mrs. Charles [illegible], Mrs. Wirth Dexter, Mrs. [illegible], Mrs. John L. ROBBERS USE LAMP IN MAINE BREAK

Dexter, Me., April 11.—The office of the Enterprise Creamery was burglarized early today. Entrance was gained by forcing one of the windows in the rear of the building. The money drawer was tampered with. It contained only fifteen cents, which was not taken. The light used to assist the burglars was in close proximity to where the lamp stood. Tracks of a man's foot was found in the snow [illegible] the window where entrance was forced.

'JUST FRIENDS' STATES ANNA; 'I WIN' SAYS DE SAGAN.

Prince Helie in Ecstacies As He Sails for That Dear Paris.

GOULD'S SLEUTH WITH HIM.

NEW YORK, April 11.—Mme. Anna Gould sailed to-day with her children and servants on the Freiderich der Grosse of the North German Lloyd line. Prince Helie De Sagan sailed an hour earlier on the St. aPul of the American line.

A detective in the employ of George Gould accompanied the latter, although the Prince did not know it. The detective was within a few feet of the Frenchman when he made his passionate declaration.

Prince in Ecstacy.

"At last I go, thank God! And I go happy—a successful siutor. But there has been no marriage—not yet. That will be in France. Oh, how happy I will be to get back to that dear country, and how sick I am of this country. Bah! I have been treated most scandalously!"

The detective's name was not on the passenger list until the last moment. He is registered as G. Cabrera and occupied stateroom No. 223. He has a roving commission to keep the closest sort of tabs on Helie and report to Mr. Gould from day to day when the Prince and Mme. Anna reach the other side.

There were no farewells for Mme. Gould when the German boat left her Hoboken pier. A besieging army of reporters bade adieu to the Prince and watched him pass from throe to throe of ecstacy.

Mme. Anna had twenty trunks, innumerable little bags and shawls and odds and ends of luggage, not to mention three small boys, their tutor, nurses, maids and secretary.

Anna Gets Captain's Room

The trunks were shipped to Hoboken in the name of Chapman, Mme. Gould's private secretary. But Mme. Gould engaged the finest suite on the steamship, taking for herself the captain's cabin on the boat deck, for which she paid $500 additional.

Edwin Jones, a tall, eager-eyed, fussy and officious lawyer, stood guard over Mme. Gould on the deck of the steamship. He declared himself her appointed ambassador, with full authority to speak. He said:

"Mme. Gould is sailing to-day with her three children and her servants and the tutor of her children. There is no secrecy so far as the family is concerned. They were all acquainted with Mme. Gould's intention to sail to-day.

"The Prince De Sagan is not on this boat, but will sail on another boat before this one leaves her dock.

"I am authorized to say that Mme. Gould is very much annoyed and worried at the treatment received by the Prince De Sagan at the hands of her family. She looks upon the Prince as one of her stanchest friends, a friend who stood by her throughout her troubles with the Castellanes.

Wedding? Oh, No!

"But—and I wish to impress this upon you—further than this friendship, there is nothing between them. Mme. Gould has told her brother George and the rest of the family that she does not intend to marry the Prince De Sagan. That is all I have to say for the present."

Prince Helie was up early to-day. It was midnight when he returned from Hoboken, after bidding the former Countess de Castellane bon voyage. A little after 8 o'clock, having breakfasted in seclusion, he left his suite and with the Vicomte Albert de Barres, cautiously slipped out through an alleyway entrance and into a common hack. In this he appeared at the American line pier, and was much annoyed to be greeted by reporters. After several volleys of futile questions, the Prince at last succumbed and made his statement.

"Mme. Gould and I had an understanding before we left the other side," he said. "My

Old Trapper Leads Hunt for Panther In Maine Forests

Find Hundreds of Dead Deer and Sheep on Trail of Invader.

Portland, Me., April 11.—Acting with a commission from the State, Joe Diguard, the best known hunter in Androscoggin county and one of the best in the State, leaves Saboatis, his home, to-morrow on a panther hunt.

Properly speaking, it is a cougar, the puma of the West, or the Injun Devil of the Canadian woods. It is a fierce old female, and to her depredations hundreds of dead sheep and deer have born testimony.

The cougar is in the immediate vicinity of Madrid, this State, and when Joe goes after her, he will be armed with a Winchester, a big revolver, his hunting knife, and his dogs. According to Joe's figuring it is an old female that has come down from across the Canadian border and has a den in some ledge. Joe says he knows where the ledge is. When he conducted his preliminary examinations, he followed the tracks of the beast, saw evidences of deer having been killed and many other traces.

Governor Guild on Road to Recovery: Bulletins Curtailed

News of Condition of State Chief to Be Given Out Every Other Night.

Governor Curtis Guild, Jr., is so far on the road to recovery at his home on Marlboro street that Dr. Frederick B. Winslow, the attending physician, will issue bulletins only every other night, beginning to-night. To-day bulletins will not be issued at all. This is regarded as one of the strongest proofs yet of the confidence felt now for the Governor's chances.

Last night's bulletin from Dr. Winslow was:

"Governor Guild had a very good day and his condition steadily improves."

There will be a bulletin to-night, and then none till Tuesday night, unless some unexpected development arises.

"Wider Development of Woman Improves Race"—Fleischer

Rabbi Declares the Smaller Their Plane the Narrower Their Companionship

"The women of 1908 are just beginning to demand a right for society status, for emancipation and for equal rights with men, and despite the fact that for nineteen hundred years women have wanted these rights, we are just beginning to realize the possibility and social responsibility of women."

This was the thought presented by Rabbi Charles Fleischer during an address on "The Women of Israel" delivered in Temple Israel, Commonwealth avenue, yesterday. He declared that the smaller the plane that woman was allowed the narrower would be [illegible] of the race. He characterized women as "the mothers of the race."

Rabbi Fleischer said:

"The ancient Jews idealized the women of their time. This is peculiar because outside the home women had no place. It was characteristic of all the Oriental peoples. In the homes the ancient women did have a peculiar place, for they were treated as queens and priestesses. The mothers were ever reverenced as were the fathers.

"Christians claim the right for the emancipation of women, but this credit does not devolve upon either Jew or Christian. Even to-day the average woman looks askance at the extraordinary woman who takes an interesting activities outside the home. The emancipation of women is, I believe, due to the development of democracy. Gradually is man being brought to respect women as individuals.

"Religions are simply incidents in the unfolding of religious spirit. We are not to take for granted that all religions stand for good. In fact it is a question if organized religions have not done more harm than good."

"We act stupidly and blindly when we try to restrict women, for the smaller you try to keep women, the poorer companions they will be for men and the poorer mothers they will make for the race. Even as we begin to breed plants and animals, we should devlop the broader, stronger and larger type of women. We have no right to discriminate between the sexes. The more that we make of women and the more that women make of themselves, the better it will be for the race."

LEAGUE PLANS CONVENTION IN CHICAGO NEXT JULY.

National Committee Will Name the Exact Date at Future Meeting.

MANY STATES ORGANIZING

Marked Advance Is Shown and Leaders Plan for the Campaign.

NEW YORK, April 11.—The National convention of the Independence party will be held in Chicago in the latter part of July. The place was fixed by a majority vote of the National committeemen of the party and the definite date of the convention will be decided later.

Chicago was selected as the convention city on account of its central location and [illegible] hotel facilities. Nearly all of the national committeemen favored Chicago on account of its geographical advantages and also because it offers, in addition to the hotel facilities, buildings large enough to house the gathering of delegates from all the States.

Widespread Organizing.

It was decided to hold the National Convention of the Independence party after the conventions of the Democratic and Republican parties in order to take advantage of the [illegible] of these two parties and also to take [illegible] candidates offered to the people. It was also believed by the National committeemen that the after part of July was an ideal date for the convention as it will introduce the party at once into a vigorous campaign.

Already a preliminary campaign is under full swing by the leaders and committeemen of the party throughout the country. The party is being organized in nearly every state in the union and organizations have already been established in twenty-four states where National committeemen have been chosen.

In Massachusetts, Illinois, California, New York and New Jersey the Independence party has a working organization of several years' standing and has now taken rank in these States with the Democratic and Republican parties.

Representative Men.

From these States large delegations, in addition to the regularly selected delegates, will go to Chicago in order to be present at the first national convention of the new party.

National committeemen for the States where they have not yet been chosen will be selected, it is expected, within the next two weeks, and work of organization for the national convention will be begun at once in these States. It is the desire of the leaders of the party to place in the office of national committeeman in each State the most representative man who is in sympathy with the principles and purposes of the Independence party.

Among the opinions of national committeemen regarding the time and place for holding the convention, are the following:

W. H. Hoffman of Louisiana: "Chicago is a good town, centrally located and easily reached by the delegates, but why not select New Orleans? New Orleans is the coming town of the United States. You know the man who does not boom his own town and try to advance it above all others lacks civic pride and patriotism which should be the prime essentials of members of our party. But I am willing to abide the view of the majority."

"Chicago Best"—Osgood.

William N. Osgood, Massachusetts: "Chicago, all things considered, is the best place, although there might be sentimental and historical arguments in favor of holding the first convention of the party in an old and historic city. Faneuil Hall, Boston, would be an ideal place, but, of course, too far East."

H. W. Diffenderfer, Oklahoma: "I would prefer St. Louis; if not St. Louis, then Chicago, in the latter part of July."

M. W. Howard, Alabama: "Chicago will be satisfactory for the national convention and the latter part of July will suit me as to the time."

C. A. Walsh, Iowa: "I consider Chicago the best place and the time should be a reasonable time after the convention of both old parties."

John Mulholland, Ohio: "Chicago is centrally located for both the East and West and is the largest railway centre, therefore would be easy of access."

"July the Time."—Spellman.

John D. Spellman, Vermont: "Chicago, more than any other city, would be the most desirable convention city. I [illegible] any date between the middle and last of July."

Howard S. Taylor, Illinois: "I [illegible] strongly in favor of holding the [illegible] convention of the Independence party in Chicago. I have found that a new party always requires plenty of time to make a campaign. We should get into the field as quickly as possible."

John T. P. Power, Minnesota: "The convention should be held two or three weeks after the other conventions. [illegible] me that Chicago is the proper place and that a more successful convention could be held there than in any other city."

George W. Harris, Tennessee: "The convention should by all means be held in Chicago. It is a central point, and that will mean much to the delegates. Then it is fully adapted to take care of many who will attend. The convention should be held about the middle of [illegible]

TAX COLLECTOR ASKED TOWN TO CUT HIS PAY

But West Springfield Refused Sibley's Strange Request.

West Springfield, April 11.—It is seldom that a public official asks for a reduction in salary, but this is what Tax Collector Fred H. Sibley did at the annual town meeting this week. Mr. Sibley receives $700 a year for collecting taxes and he asked that this be reduced to $600. He was unsuccessful in getting the reduction, and was voted $700.

Police Find Shrunken Little Bodies Covered With Rags In Cheerless Home.

MOTHER NOW IN ASYLUM

Abject poverty has blasted what was one of Newton's humblest, yet happiest homes. Seven children, their features pallid, pinched and wan through hunger, are to-day in the care of Mrs. Ella Nason, matron at the Newton police station, while Mrs. Rosanna Carroll, wife of James Carroll, an honest blacksmith of No. 1243 Walnut street, Newton Highlands, is spending her first day as an inmate of the Westboro Insane Asylum, whither sheer starvation has driven her. The father, who has been unable to properly support his wife and children, is to be appealed to to consent to his little ones being placed in proper institutions.

In a squalid room, with their small and shrunken bodies scarcely covered by the rags which they called clothing, Chief of Police Mitchell and Patrolman Morton found the desperate children [illegible] starving of [illegible] room. The mother, wild-eyed and emaciated, was later found wandering the streets utterly forgetful of the wants of her little ones, so serious is her mental condition.

Give Only Crust to Baby.

Baby Catherine, eight months old, was propped up in a corner of the bare and cold room ravenously sucking at a hard, dry crust, the only morsel of food in the house, while the other children were clamoring for the return of Michael, four [illegible] who had promised to [illegible]

Through the thoughtfulness and [illegible] of little Mary, who is [illegible] the younger children own their lives, for it was Mary, during the long, dark days of cruel poverty, who saw to it that any little scrap of food which found its way into the squalid dwelling was given to the baby, to Agnes who is seven, to Margaret, four, and to Richard, two. Michael and William, who is thirteen, managed to shift better than Mary and her charges, for they could forage.

Neighbors for some days had noticed the wan, pinched faces of the mother and her children. They noted, too, that Mrs. Carroll would leave her children and wander listlessly for hours through the streets and fields, her staring eyes apparently seeing nothing. Finally they called Chief Mitchell's attention to the family, and not a moment too soon, as the results proved.

Feast on Real Food.

The children were brought to the warm and comfortable police station, where Matron Nason washed them and dressed them in comfortable and warm clothing. Then the little ones sat down to the first square meal they have had no one knows in what time. They ate as though they were famished.

When the tender-hearted matron described the scene to the Boston Sunday American reporter her eyes filled with tears, accustomed as she is to scenes of suffering and desolation.

"I want Catherine to be with me," cries little Mary, the self-appointed guardian of her little brothers and sisters. "Catherine cries if any one else than me takes her, and if mamma has got to go away to the country on business I know that she would want me to take care of baby. Nobody shall take my little brothers and sisters from me."

"LITTLE MOTHER" HEROINE

And more sad than this pathetic scene was that when the crazed mother bade her children farewell before she left for the insane asylum. She failed to realize her position at all and wildly embraced her little ones, promising to bring them back toys and trinkets as mementoes of her visit to Westboro.

Mind Shattered by Hunger.

Carroll has been working in the blacksmith of J. C. Farrar. He toils early and late and failed to notice the gradual change in the mind of his wife, who, when she was herself, was a devoted and tender mother, but who, since poverty has [illegible] the home, has neglected the little [illegible] and [illegible] wandered through the streets [illegible] for miles.

If Mr. Carroll will give his consent, the [illegible] children will probably be turned over to the Home for Destitute Catholic Children and the older boys to the Working Boys' Home in Newton. The baby will [illegible] be placed in an infant asylum. Should he object, however, the children will be turned over to the State Charitable officials to be placed in some State institution.

HOBSON FEARS WORLD WAR; PLEADS BIG NAVY

'Conflict Between Yellow and White Races Inevitable,' He Declares in Dramatic Speech in the House.

Washington, April 11.—A war that will involve all the nations of the world, with America at the climax, was predicted in the House to-day by Representative Richmond P. Hobson in the course of his speech in behalf of a larger navy.

"The war clouds are gathering," he said, "the clouds that will bring not only war between nations of the white race, but a great war between the races of the world, and I see America right here in the climax, placed here by Providence.

"My countrymen, it is not a vision nor a dream. You and I can do it. Let us begin by authorizing four battleships at this time."

Captain Hobson declared a conflict between the yellow and white races [illegible] he added.

"The time is coming when [illegible] not only to do its duty in the world but to preserve its very existence, must turn the country into an armed camp and control the two oceans which bound it on the East and West.

The demonstration following Representative Hobson's speech has not been equaled in the House for many months.

Calls For More Battleships.

His speech was an argument to demonstrate that the navy was the principal arm of the nation's defense. The item of new construction, Captain Hobson said, was the most vital part of the bill, and battleships the most important part of the construction. If an increase of the number of battleships was opposed on the score of economy, he said, the gentlemen should turn their attention to the first item in the bill—pay and allowance.

The sum provided for construction was small by comparison with other authorized expenditures. More battleships were necessary, he asserted, because they were the units upon which comparison was made.

The American navy, he added, was intended, like that of every other nation, to win victories if war came, but primarily to enable us to live in peace, fearing nothing from the military aggressions of other nations.

Scores Treatment of Navy.

Mr. Hobson said the bill authorised more men than enough to furnish crews for four battleships.

"Why not use the ships for these crews," he asked.

"Does not the gentleman know that we have never been able to recruit the number of men authorized to be enlisted," inquired Mr. Foss of Illinois.

"The gentleman knows nothing of the kind," said Hobson.

He said he knew there was a shortage of men in the navy, but that was the result of the unscientific way in which the navy was treated.

"Abroad," he said, "when a battleship is authorized to be constructed, the law carries with it provision for the necessary crew to man her. When we deal scientifically with the navy there will be ships for all the men and men for all the ships."

Mr. Hobson's expensive plan of naval defence made such an impression upon Mr. Randall of Texas that he inquired:

"How long at that rate would it take to bankrupt the world?"

"Well, the United States controls $17,000,000,000 of banking capital, the rest of the world about as much more. I figure that the other nations would go broke about 2,000 years before the United States without the armaments," replied Hobson.

Five Years Behind Japan.

Mr. Hobson detailed also at some of the progress and the power of the Japanese.

"If we sent every ship in the navy to the Pacific, absolutely stripping the Atlantic, we could not be on even terms with Japan for five years. I am stating facts which you as patriots have no right to neglect.

"If the United States had had $50,000,000 in battleships in 1898, when we [illegible] Russia to evacuate Manchuria, as she had promised to do, we could have enforced that demand and would have spared the world the Russo-Japanese war."

HUGHES PLEADS TODAY IN RACE BETTING WAR

Utica, N. Y., April 11.—Governor Hughes will make an appeal to the people of the State in behalf of his anti-race track gambling bills at a mass meeting in the Majestic Theatre to-morrow afternoon. The announcement of the contemplated meeting was made to-day by Assemblyman Hart of this city, one of the sponsors for the bills. Hon. John D. Kernan, a prominent Democrat of this city, formerly a State railroad commissioner, will preside.

Referee Delays A. G. Vanderbilt Divorce Report

"Undecided," He Now States, and May Call More Witnesses in Case.

New York, April 11.—Referee David McClure was undecided to-day as to what Gwynnne Vanderbilt divorce case, so far as his report was concerned.

If he had cared to make his report to Justice O'Gorman to-day it could have been done witout rushing the referee, attorneys or witnesses, but Mr. McClure became "undecided over what I will do," and let the matter rest at that.

It was suggested that he "might like to have a few more witnesses called," but just why he would call more witnesses no one seems to know. He has the evidence in the case, and was ready, acording to one of the attorneys interested, to make his report Friday afternoon.

But this he did not do, notwithstanding the rumor that passed from house to house among themembers of the four hundred that Mrs. Vanderbilt had been granted her divorce.

It was said to-night [illegible] close friend of Mrs. Vanderbilt [illegible] is strongly opposed to any more evidence or delay in the case.

ACCUSE RAILWAY OF BIG THEFT OF WATER

Sensational Charge Made Against Portland Company.

Portland, Me., April 11.—During the course of the water district hearing in the United States Court to-day the Portland Railroad Company was openly [illegible] of stealing a million gallons of water every day for the past seven years. It was alleged that this water was secured by tapping the pipes back of the meter. The sensational charge was denied by the railroad company, but the water company claims it has proof and will back up its statement.

SKELETON FOUND ON MOUNT.

Altoona, Pa., April 11.—In a secluded spot underneath a heap of brush, which had evidently been used for a shelter, the skeleton of a man was found on Reservoir Mountain by John Young. It is supposed to be that of Albert Mentzer, a prominent citizen of Frankstown, who disappeared a year since.

HUGHES-TAFT WAR SPLITS NEW YORK G. O. P.

BRACKETT HEADS REVOLT

THREATEN TO KNIFE TICKET

Endorsement Given Hughes, but Many Congressional Delegates Will Vote for Taft.

NEW YORK, April 11.—After wrangling for several hours with the leaders hurling bitter personalities at each other, the Taft forces blocked an attempt of the adherents of Charles E. Hughes in the Republican State convention to-day to bind all the State delegation to Chicago with an iron-clad declaration in favor of the governor. As a result of the victory won by the administration men, at least half of the national delegates will cast their ballots for Taft.

As the convention progressed the harmony that marked its opening was rudely shattered and the chiefs of the two factions shouted charges of fraud at each other, while Chairman Sherman vainly pounded for order, and the delegates added to the uproar by cheers and hisses. It was the most turbulent convention the Republicans have held in many years.

Tonight the threat of the Brackett faction made in the heat of debate to knife the ticket in the Fall was the topic of excited conversation on all sides and it was freely predicted that the jealousies aroused and the angry recriminations made during the bitter debate could not but seriously hurt the chances of the party's carrying the State in the Fall.

Old War Horses in Action.

The real organization leaders were opposed to endorsing the candidacy of Hughes, but they feared to ignore it, inasmuch as the Hughes League, headed by Senator Edgar T. Brackett of Saratoga, had promised a fight that would disrupt the party if he was not endorsed. So it was decided to instruct the delegates-at-large in lukewarm fashion and ignore absolutely the congressional district delegations.

But the plan failed and for the first time in many years a real fight took place on the floor of a State Republican convention, and old party war horses, such as Brackett, Sena or Horace White of Syracuse, Chairman Sereno E. Payne, Assemblyman Ed Merritt and others, fully as well known, exchanged personalities and there was a bitterness engendered that gives promise of being carried into the coming campaign.

The convention had gone along through its initial session, two lengthy speeches had been made by Temporary Chairman M. Linn Bruce and Permanent Chairman Congressman James S. Sherman, and it appeared that the machinery would work well and that there would be no discord.

In fact, the delegates were beginning to congratulate themselves that all was well when from the committee room where the committee on resolutions was at work came the word that there was a fight on there.

Brackett Heads Revolt.

Brackett and six other members of the committee were dissatisfied. They declared that there was no reason why the delegates-at-large should not be instructed to work for the nomination of Hughes "until he is actually nominated" and the more the question was debated the more determined they became.

Finally when matters seemed acute Chairman White announced that he favored giving the Brackett men the right to introduce a minority report, something they could not do under the rules without the permission of the committee. And this was done.

As soon as White had offered the original report Brackett was on his feet with his substitute. It provided for the instruction of [illegible] delegates [illegible] stating that "in view of the real Hughes sentiment and of recent events the delegates-at-large are instructed and delegates from the several districts are requested to persistently labor for his nomination until his nomination is made."

Brackett then made a speech bitterly attacking the majority. He declared that the leaders of the party were insincere and that they were parties to a conspiracy to discredit the Governor, despite the fact that the "great rank and file of the party favors his nomination."

Woodruff Attacks Minority.

State Chairman Timothy L. Woodruff answered Brackett. He declared the minority report was an "insult to every [illegible] delegate," and insisted that the committee and the convention had no right to even suggest to district delegates who they should vote for.

Congressman Sereno E. Payne followed with an attack on the motives of the minority. "I yield to no man in my admiration of the Governor," he declared, "but [illegible] this attempt to dictate to the delegates from this State is contrary to the rules of the party and its methods of procedure. And it is in bad taste for the men who are back of this proposed resolution to attempt to dictate to a delegation such as will represent this State at Chicago."

Several other speeches along the same line were made, the Hughes people seem-

STEADY GROWTH OF LEAGUE GREAT POLITICAL SENSATION

REPUBLICANS AND DEMOCRATS IN FEAR

As Gladiators of the Old Parties Enter the Arena of 1908, Nation Sees There Is to Be Fight for Real Principles by League.

POLITICAL WISEACRES HAVE MANY THEORIES

"Situation Without Parallel"—"Best Independent Position Since 1860." "Democrats Concerned"—"Republicans in as Great Danger."

It is nearly half a century since any new political party created anything like the amazement that has come over the politicians as the result of the public reception of the National Independence Party idea. As the campaign draws nearer, and State after State is taking up the new party movement, the men who want to be candidates of their parties and their backers are more at a loss than ever to determine how far the new national party will go.

The extent to which the League has already been able to go is partly illustrated by the fact that not only the newspapers of one State are talking about it, or by the fact that all of the newspapers in the United States are talking about it, but more by the fact that some of the newspapers in nearly every civilized country of the globe are discussing the possible effect of the party on future American politics.

One of the London newspapers, while cheerfully admitting its regret that Mr. Hearst cannot be wrecked, points out that he is likely to create a lot of trouble for the politicians. This seems to be the dominant idea of the hostile American press also, which is continuing to discuss the possible candidates of the League.

One paper makes the new party ticket Hearst and Watson; another makes it Watson and Hearst; and still another says these two leaders cannot agree. Some papers say La Follette would be strongest as a League candidate, and others say he cannot possibly be a League nominee.

AND THE POLITICIANS ARE AS MUCH AT SEA AS THE NEWSPAPERS ARE.

"POSITION OF HEARST CONCERNS DEMOCRATS"

(From the Review of Reviews.)

Nothing has happened to change the prospect that Mr. Bryan will be nominated by the Democrats in their Denver convention. The position of Mr. William R. Hearst is naturally giving the Democrats much concern. On February 22 there was a conference at Chicago composed of the leaders of Mr. Hearst's Independence League, and plans were then and there made for the launching of a new national party as yet unnamed. This new party is to wait until after the Republican and Democratic conventions have been held. A national committee was formed, with authority to choose the [illegible] and fix the date for the convention. Mr. Hearst, as head of the movement, delivered a carefully prepared speech, which was regarded as sounding the keynote of the new national party's principles. After a series of generalities in commendation of the principles of the Declaration of Independence the platform as adopted at Chicago announces the purpose to destroy the power of selfish special interests by wresting from their hands their main weapon, the corruption fund. The next purpose stated is to "correct some of the obvious financial and economic evils of the day." Another object is to "develop the resources of the country." In characterizing the present parties Mr. Hearst says that the most bitter and uncompromising antagonism is to be found between the radical Democratic party and the conservative Democratic party. To some extent he finds such a cleavage also in the Republican party. He declares it to be uncertain as yet which wing of either party will be in control of the approaching conventions.

Mr. Hearst proceeds as follows: "It depends upon what particular clique secures control of the Republican machinery whether that party declares for Roosevelt and radicalism or Cannon and conservatism, or Hughes and hypocrisy.

"The Democratic party has stood heroically for Bryan and bimetallism one year, for philanthropy in the Philippines one year, for conservatism and a campaign fund one year, and for public ownership for part of another year—until, indeed, that deep-rooted conviction collided with the Jim Crow car.

"The Democratic party accuses Roosevelt of having stolen its clothes.

"What clothes?

"Which suit?

"If Roosevelt appropriated any Democratic garments, he probably found them lying around unworn, uncared for, unclaimed.

"The political clothes of the average politician are not much to steal. They too often resemble the harlequin attire of a masquerade.

"Mr. Roosevelt, by way of diversion, if he is at all addicted to the boots and breeches of the Democracy, has frightened the country into financial fits. What would be the probable effect on the community of a Democratic President arrayed in these contrasting colors of the full Democratic regalia.

"With all due respect to the honest citizens in the Democratic and Republican parties, the reason is that the reforms we advocate cannot well be accomplished either with the old parties or in conjunction with the old parties."

It had been rumored that Mr. Hearst and the Independence League would support Mr. Bryan upon a radical platform. But the [illegible] now seems complete. It was widely reported last month that Senator La Follette would be nominated for President by the new party. Mr. La Follette, however, is a candidate for the Republican nomination. Although he has broken the old party ranks all to pieces in Wisconsin, he has always fought his battles as a Republican. His friends state by authority that he will continue to assert his views within the party where so many men of his general way of thinking are still to be found. In the course of the Senate debate on the Aldrich currency bill last month Mr. La Follette made a powerful attack upon the concentrated power of a well known group of men who control the financial, transportation and industrial interests that have their business headquarters in the Wall Street district.

"We Hope Hearst Will Get There"

(From the Lewiston, Maine, Journal.)

Hearst has decided that he won't run as the Presidential candidate of his new party, but he will promote the Presidential leadership of that party through some other man, perhaps by Hisgen of Massachusetts. Hearst will be a candidate for Mayor of New York. Hearst was probably elected Mayor when McClellan was installed in the Mayoralty by what are believed to be 30,000 fraudulent votes, not to name other dodges. Should Hearst's right to be Mayor be indorsed by the courts, Hearst expects to succeed McClellan not later than July 1 and to continue Mayor until the close of 1909. If he can have six months in the New York Mayoralty, Hearst says that he will make a record that will force his nomination and re-election next year. Recount of the New York City vote will begin next week in the Supreme Court. Public opinion is not with Hearst's policies, but it is with Hearst's Mayoralty claims. There is little doubt that Hearst was elected Mayor and that the Tammany gang stole the election. The New York Democratic management now stands with Judge Parker Democracy, and Judge Parker is a reformer. We hope Hearst will get there. He can easily improve on McClellan Murphy.

"Talk of Hisgen Is Steadily Increasing"

(From the Boston Transcript.)

The date for the State convention of the Independence League to elect delegates to the national convention, which will nominate a presidential ticket, has been decided as May 9, and the place Faneuil Hall in Boston. Talk of Thomas L. Hisgen as the candidate for President on their ticket is steadily on the increase, and especially in the West the papers are devoting much space to his name. Mr. Hisgen himself is not anxious for the honor, but would accept it if offered to him. He is known all over the country as the man who received the largest vote for Governor of Massachusetts an independent candidate ever received, and for his fight against the Standard Oil Company. Since Hearst has announced that he has no desire to be nominated as President, but prefers to be Mayor of New York, Hisgen is practically unopposed for the honor, at least in this section of the country.

LONDON PAPER ENTERS GUESSING CONTEST AND—HAS ANOTHER GUESS

(From the London News.)

TO-MORROW will see a new and bold step taken by the most powerful demagogue in the world, Mr. William Randolph Hearst, the hundred-tongued prophet of Great Britain's "traditional enmity" to the United States. From the editorial headquarters in New York of the journalistic army which he can mobilize at any moment he will send forth a call for a national convention of the party created by him, organized with extraordinary skill, and now named the "National Party." National conventions meet for the purpose of selecting a candidate for the Presidency, which Mr. Roosevelt lays down this year. The Socialists, the Prohibitionists and a few other organizations hold conventions and put up candidates for the sake of appearances, but the only conventions that have hitherto mattered have been those of the two historic parties—the Republicans and the Democrats. Mr. Hearst's convention may name a champion who will press the official candidates hard, and his name will be Hearst. Hitherto Mr. Hearst has confined the work of his own organized following in Presidential campaigns to supporting the official radicalism, strengthening the Democrats' left wing.

Now he is loose, and things will happen. He will certainly enroll a great deal of the powerful and ever growing Socialist strength in the country, for his fight against "the money power," wherever it shows its head, has been untiring, bitter and often successful, and he will attract a proportion of the Democratic force. Plainly, there are here the elements of a sensational "deal" with the Democratic party, if Mr. Hearst can show the strength he counts upon.

Two months ago it was pointed out in this column how the much-trumpeted defeat of Mr. Hearst's candidates in a municipal fight with the unique power of Tammany in New York had been followed by his victory in a similar contest in Boston. Since he has chosen to make himself England's unscrupulous enemy we would gladly see him wrecked, but there is nothing pointing to that result at present.

"BEST INDEPENDENT POSITION SINCE 1860"

(From the Lima (O.) Republican Gazette.)

The new Independence party and the part it may play in the coming campaign is attracting more attention than the leaders of the old parties have given the doings of a third party in many years. Excepting the indorsement of Bryan by the Populists in 1896, no third party since before the Civil War has been in a position to make itself of so much consequence in a national campaign.

The general belief in Washington is that Mr. Hearst will be the new party's candidate for President. There has been some talk that Senator La Follette might be the nominee, but this is discredited. No man can make even an intelligent guess as to what strength Mr. Hearst would show in the presidential race. When he was an independent candidate for Mayor of New York the Tammany leaders figured him to poll 25,000 votes. The Tammany count gave him 225,000 votes, and the Hearst people claim that 15,000 legal Hearst ballots were thrown out in the count. Should the Independence party nominate him for President and should he make anything like a proportionate showing there might be all sorts of complications for the old parties.

"LA FOLLETTE WOULD HURT REPUBLICANS"

(From the Grand Rapids Press.)

Some interest is lent to the political situation by the report that it is the purpose of the Independence League, the Hearst organization, to nominate Senator La Follette as its candidate for the Presidency. Mr. La Follette and the Independence League platform go well together. Indeed, if the Senator is to be a candidate, and if the League is to have a ticket, no better combination would be made if only the man and the platform are considered.

For the present the matter is one for interesting speculation only. Senator La Follette is a candidate for the Republican nomination, and is sure at least of the vote of his own State in the convention. No one knows what may occur in the convention, and stranger things than his nomination have happened. The first question which presents itself, therefore, is whether in event of Senator La Follette's nomination at Chicago the Independence League will adopt his candidacy and thus throw its strength to the Republican ticket. If so would it help or hurt.

If it does not thus throw its strength to the Republicans, it is already established that it will put up an independent ticket. It has been definitely announced that it will not support Mr. Bryan or Governor Johnson. If Senator La Follette is not nominated by the Republicans, and there is little prospect that he will be, and if he is nominated by the Independence League, what will be the effect on the chances of the Republican nominee? It has been assumed that the League would hurt Bryan most, but would it under the circumstances above outlined?

The answer would seem to be that it depends almost wholly on the Republican nominee. If, as now seems most probable, Mr. Taft is nominated, it is not likely that Senator La Follette will consent to accept the offer of an independent nomination. If Mr. Taft is defeated at Chicago and what is termed a reactionary is nominated, and especially if the Southern delegates are instrumental in effecting that result, La Follette would be easily persuaded to head a third ticket, and he would draw heavily from the Republican ranks.

All this may be idle speculation, yet it opens up a vista of interesting possibilities.

RHODE ISLANDERS JOINING LEAGUE

(From the Providence Tribune.)

The Rhode Island Independence League held a meeting in Keith Hall yesterday afternoon, the auditorium being well filled and considerable interest and enthusiasm being manifested by those present in the remarks of the speakers. The principles of the Independence League as adopted at the recent national conference held in Chicago were explained, as were the purposes for which the League was organized.

The principal speaker was Joseph R. Buchanan, State secretary of the Independence League of New Jersey. He made a forceful address and his arguments were of such a convincing nature to many of his hearers that at the conclusion of the meeting the majority of those present gave their names and expressed their desire and intention of enrolling as members of the League in this State.

Ex-Mayor Walter L. Ramsdell of Lynn, E. J. Cantwell of Fall River, and Joseph E. Jackson of Fall River, were the other speakers, Chairman Frank O. Merewether of East Providence bringing the meeting to a close with an appeal for those present to enroll in the League.

Frank Merewether called the meeting to order in his capacity as chairman, stating that it was the purpose to organize an Independence League in the State and make it a permanent body. He presented ex-Mayor Walter L. Ramsdell of Lynn.

Refusing to Fuse, Party Named Right

(From the Provincetown Beacon.)

"LEAGUE VOTE TO BE FROM DEMOCRACY"

"Could Bryan Do Better With the President's Policies Than Roosevelt Himself Can?"

(From the Austin, Tex., Statesman.)

Presidential politics have been somewhat further complicated by the completion of the national organization of the Independence League. The decision of the League to hold a national convention after the Democratic convention is no doubt intended to take advantage of any mistake the Democratic party may make. Mr. Hearst thinks Mr. Taft or President Roosevelt will be nominated by the Republicans and that Mr. Bryan will receive the Democratic nomination and evidently does not see any possibility of Mr. Bryan's election as his indorsement of most of the Roosevelt policies will leave but the paramount issue for the people to decide of who will best carry out the Roosevelt policies. Could Mr. Bryan be expected to do so any better than Mr. Roosevelt would?

Undoubtedly the Independence League or the National party, as Mr. Hearst proposes to call it, will nominate a ticket, and the great majority of the voters that indorse it will be drawn from the Democracy. In the close States that will tell disastrously for Mr. Bryan, for he can hardly expect to be supported by dissatisfied Republicans, who believe that the Roosevelt policies caused the panic. Mr. Bryan would stand for the same results according to that view of the cause of business depression.

These political complications cannot but force the conviction upon those Democrats who want to win that some other candidate than Mr. Bryan would have a better chance of success.

La Follette May Be Independent Nominee

(From the Concord, N. H., Patriot.)

It is barely possible that La Follette may yet be a candidate for the presidency of the Independent League. Should this happen, some people will know that La Follette is in the race.

GRAVES FINDS VIRGINIANS READY TO VOTE FOR NEW PARTY

(From the Norfolk "Virginian Pilot.")

"William R. Hearst will not be the Presidential candidate of the Independence League," declared John Temple Graves yesterday. "He is willing and anxious to work in the ranks of the Independent party and give it the support of his nine great newspapers, which reach about 9,000,000 American voters.

"If we do not win this time, we will four years hence. I am amazed at the sentiment in Norfolk and elsewhere in Virginia favoring the new party. Although I have only been in Norfolk one day, I have talked with about one hundred people, and all of them tell me they are going to vote the Independent ticket. These men are not going around blatting their intentions, but when they go to the polls to vote they will drop in their ballot for the Independent candidate."

"On what do you base your claim of a big vote for the Independence League candidate?" Mr. Graves was asked.

"Because Americans are tired of the old parties," he declared. "What do they represent? Take the Republican party. What is it to-day? It is made up on one side of dissatisfied followers of Foraker, who, if Taft is nominated, will openly oppose him or secretly knife him. If the Foraker following is successful, the Roosevelt and Taft faction will not be satisfied. With all this dissatisfaction with rulers of the old party they will turn for relief to the Independent party.

"The Democratic party—what is it made up of? One faction favors the revision of the tariff, the other opposes it. One faction is 'safe, sane and conservative,' the other radical. One faction oppose Bryan and his dictatorship. Bryan has and is still dictating to the party that has twice honored him with the greatest honor it could give. Twice he has been the Presidential candidate of his party and twice he has been defeated.

"If he is nominated a third time, that faction opposed to him and his doctrines will seek relief elsewhere. They will vote the Independent ticket, because that is the ticket that guarantees them what they want, the truth, equal rights, every man an equal.

"Both old parties are composed of men, all of them wanting offices. There are not enough to go around.

"The Independence League, with Mr. Hearst as its candidate for Governor, polled 500,000 votes in New York State. With Mr. Hearst its candidate for Mayor of New York City this same party polled 245,000 votes, of which only 225,000 were counted. Every fair-minded man believes that Hearst was elected Mayor of New York.

"Mr. Hearst did not want to be Mayor. His party insisted that he become its candidate, while the Republicans and Democrats said it was a forlorn hope. The result speaks for itself.

"In the State of Massachusetts the Independence League is the second strongest party. It has completely ousted the Democratic party. In the last gubernatorial campaign the Independence League candidate polled 8,000 more votes than the Democratic candidate. This, too, in its first campaign in that State.

"I tell you that an Independent wave is sweeping this old country. Right here in this grand old State of Virginia men are anxious to free themselves of the yoke of both the old parties, which have held them in their grip long enough. They are tired of broken pledges, false promises and bossism."

"Do you think Mr. Hearst would become a candidate for President on the Independence League ticket if his party insisted on him accepting the nomination?" he was asked.

"I am not in a position to say just what Mr. Hearst would do in that case. He has sacrificed his business to become a candidate on previous occasions at the earnest solicitation of the party whose principles he has so earnestly advocated and is still advocating. If his party thought it would be to the best interests to have him become a candidate I believe that he would again sacrifice his business."

"Who else besides Mr. Hearst has been mentioned as a candidate for President on the Independence League ticket?"

"The newspapers have mentioned several. Among them is Senator La Follette of Wisconsin. Mr. Hearst will make a vigorous campaign, no matter who the candidate may be. His papers will give the party and the candidate their undivided support."

In replying to a question that some of Mr. Hearst's strong supporters in this section of the country did not approve of the Independence League fusion with the Republican and Democratic parties in New York campaigns, Mr. Graves said:

"Mr. Hearst fought fusion at every turn. He is not the whole party, you know, and other advisers were responsible for the Independence League fusing with the Democrats in the New York gubernatorial campaign and the Republicans in the recent New York City campaign, when Max F. Ihmsen was the Independence League candidate for Sheriff.

"Mr. Hearst always did oppose fusion. He told me only a few days ago that he would rather run on the Independence League ticket, and receive the solid vote of those who believe in its doctrines, than to run on a fusion ticket and be elected.

"His attitude toward fusion is clearly shown in the statement he made in the New York campaign, when it was said Leader Murphy of Tammany Hall was for him. His reply was, 'Murphy may be for me, but I am not for Murphy.'"

Mr. Graves spent yesterday in Norfolk and will leave to-day for Atlanta, his home. He says he will return to New York in about a week. He spent most of yesterday at the Virginia Club, where many of his old friends called to pay their respects.

"POLITICAL BATTLE IS JUST BEGINNING"

"The Independent Vote Has in Times Past Proved to Hold Balance of Power."

(From the San Antonio (Tex.) Express.)

The recent speech of Mr. La Follette in the Senate has not only aligned him with the most radical of the radicals, but appears to have been accepted as giving some color to the reputed alliance with the Hearst Independence League.

The Hearst party will hold a national convention—if the announced programme be carried out—within a week or so after the meeting of the Democratic National Convention in Denver, and will either indorse one of the national tickets then before the country, or nominate a ticket of its own.

Mr. Hearst has been reported as saying that the Independence League would not be satisfied with either Taft or Bryan and that he would not seek a nomination for himself. It has also been intimated that the Wisconsin Senator more nearly than any other public man of the day represents the ideas and policies of the Independence Leaguers. By his recent cantankerous performance in the Senate Mr. La Follette may be considered to have removed himself from the possibilities of nomination by the Chicago convention, and he appears to have such confidence in his personal following and his own propaganda that he would not hesitate to cut loose from the Republican party if he considered it advisable to do so. Nevertheless, the Wisconsin Republicans may see proper to give her former popular Governor a favorite son indorsement, and thus hold him within the party lines, unless he is determined to break over.

What effect the nomination by a third party of a candidate even more radical than Mr. Bryan would have on the chance of Democratic success in the pending national election can hardly be foretold. The ticket would undoubtedly draw some support from both the old parties, but not, perhaps, so much as would a ticket representing the conservative and business interests that are not partial to the Roosevelt policies nor at all friendly to the personality or platform of Mr. Bryan.

Still there are yet some uncertainties as to the outcome of the Chicago and Denver conventions, and the alignment of that large, truly independent vote which is essentially non-partisan and incapable of absorption by any political interest, and which has in times past proved to hold the balance of power. So the battle is just beginning.

No Populist and League Alliance?

(From the Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.)

According to an announcement made by Chairman Forrest of the Populist National Committee, the convention of the third party, which is to assemble at St. Louis next Thursday, will be a cut-and-dried affair, all the delegates, except those from Nebraska and Alabama, being instructed to vote for the nomination of Thomas E. Watson of Georgia for President. Nebraska's vote goes to W. J. Bryan and Alabama's to Congressman M. W. Howard. This programme does not harmonize with the seemingly authentic reports made public some time ago with reference to an understanding between William R. Hearst and the Populist managers. There has been good reason to expect that the Hearst Independents and the Populists would get together. Practically the same political creed is professed by the two organizations, and the expediency of their pooling issues is self-evident. The Populists, in the present weakened condition of their party, should be glad of an alliance of any kind, and the same is true of the Hearst organization, which is a new growth and needs all assistance that may be within reach. It is possible that an arrangement is under way and that the Watson announcement is intended merely to divert public attention while Mr. Hearst and his Populist friends complete negotiations.

"HEARST'S DESIRE MAY BE GRATIFIED"

"Evident He Is Looking Long Way Ahead—Will Strive for Record as Mayor."

(From the Savannah News.)

It is practically settled that Mr. Hearst will not accept the nomination of his party, the National Independence League, for President. He doesn't want to enter national politics this year, mainly for the reason that he would gain nothing thereby. His plan is to make himself popular between now and the next Presidential campaign and be a candidate then.

He expects to take Mr. McClellan's place as Mayor of New York in July. He has been fighting to have a recount of the votes cast in the last municipal election in that city, and he has won his fight. The recount will be begun next month and will be completed in time to permit him to take the office of Mayor by July 1, if the result is in his favor. He has no doubt it will be. If he gets in the Mayor's chair he will strive to make a record that will put him in the front rank of the popular men of the country. He will get a re-election to the Mayoralty, at least that is said to be his programme—and by 1913 he will be ready for the National Independence League to put him in the White House.

It is evident that he is looking a long way ahead and planning for high places and honors. He may have his ambition gratified. Just what his future is going to be no one can predict with any degree of certainty. It is alleged by his lieutenants that it is certain that neither he nor the National Independence League will support Mr. Bryan for President. That matter may not be entirely settled yet. It is the understanding that Mr. Bryan is going to call on him again and endeavor to get his support. The chances are against his being successful. Mr. Hearst is against Mr. Bryan because the latter failed to support him for the presidential nomination of the Democratic party in 1904. He isn't a man who forgets easily. He hasn't forgotten that Mr. Bryan in 1904 thought more of his own political future than he did of helping the friends who helped him in 1896 and 1900. According to Mr. Hearst's idea there is no greater sin than the sin of ingratitude.

But the National Independence League is going to play a part in the presidential campaign. It is going to have a ticket of its own. The politicians are speculating in respect to the number of votes it will poll. It will be large enough in some of the States to cause uneasiness to the other candidates. It will draw votes from both of the old parties, but from which it will draw the greater number is the subject of a very great difference of opinion.

"Congressmen Learn of Hearst-Watson Fusion."

(From the New Orleans States.)

A special from Washington to the New York World, published this morning, says a fusion of the old Populist and new Independence parties, the one headed by Thomas E. Watson of Georgia and the other by William R. Hearst of New York, Democratic Congressmen from the West and South learn, will be actually effected before many weeks elapse, and the fusion ticket will probably be Hearst and Watson. It is pointed out by these Congressmen that recently Hearst formally declared that his Independence party would not support Bryan or Roosevelt or Johnson, but would have a candidate of its own. About the same time Watson, in his weekly Jeffersonian, published at Atlanta, advised the Populists to support neither Bryan nor Roosevelt, but to put a candidate of their own in the field. That the Watson advice is being accepted is shown by the fact that the "Pops" of Kansas in mass meeting at Topeka declined to indorse Bryan, and passed resolutions favoring Watson for the presidency.

"TO BE CAMPAIGN OF UNCERTAINTIES"

"Hearst League and Other Elements Without Parallel in Political Experience."

(From the Cleveland Plain Dealer.)

Party lines are likely to be very loosely drawn in the coming contest; the two leading parties differ so little on many issues that the voter may have to stop and consider before he is able to say whether he be a Republican or a Democrat; Hearst's Independence League is to be in the field and there are other elements that are without parallel in recent political experience. The radical parties evidently will be the Populist and Independence League, and should they combine, the amalgamated organization would be the natural refuge for those who find in neither the Republican nor Democratic platform enough of the revolutionary to suit them. If Populism is to become a force in American politics again, it would appear that the time is ripe now for its resurrection.

Except for the Socialists, who have not cut much of a figure in national campaigns thus far, there will be no party for the believer in government ownership of railways and other national utilities, save the Populist and Independence League organizations. Mr. Bryan announced his adherence to this doctrine in a somewhat tentative way on his return from his world tour, but dropped the subject when it appeared that his party would not support his view. There are, of course, thousands, not only in his party, but among Republicans as well, who believe in government ownership of railways as the ultimate solution of the corporation problem. It is possible they will welcome this opportunity to throw their votes to a candidate pledged to carry out the doctrine. It is to be a campaign of uncertainties, among which is to be counted the strength that may be shown by such organizations as those controlled by Mr. Watson and Mr. Hearst.

"Pops Breaking From Bryan Domination"

(From the Morgantown (W. Va.) Post.)

While Governor Johnson of Minnesota is disturbing the dreams of the "peerless leader" of Democracy, other and more potent things are arising to plague him. The greatest distraction takes the form of a coalition of Hearst's Independence party with the Populists under the leadership of Thomas E. Watson of Georgia. The combination of Hearst and Watson would be a formidable one, and is one of the signs of the breaking away of the Populists from Bryan's domination. Watson was the Populist candidate for the vice-presidency on the ticket with Bryan, who was the fusion candidate of the Democrats and Populists for President in 1896. Watson to-day has a stronger hold on the Populists than Bryan, especially in the South.

Another slap at Bryan comes from the Kansas Populists, who denounce him for supporting Judge Parker "on the ground of party fealty," which is the unkindest cut of all, for who among the prophets of Populism more loudly proclaimed its principles than he?

"La Follette Plan Lends New Interest"

(From the Scranton, Pa., Truth.)

There is a rumor at Washington that Senator La Follette of Wisconsin may be the nominee of William R. Hearst's Independence League for President of the United States. Mr. Hearst announced, some time since, that he would not support William J. Bryan, and it was believed then that Mr. Hearst himself would be a candidate. The candidacy of La Follette lends new interest to the situation.

How Two Smartly Dressed Back Bay Society Girls Look in the Very Latest Spring Hats

MISS MARIE LEE MISS GRETCHEN ROGERS

Do the cultured girls of the conservative Boston society set scorn the latest in millinery?

Not so.

Witness Miss Marie Lee and Miss Gretchen Rogers under their "Merry Widow sailor" and their "Riverside" hats respectively.

Neither hats are extreme in style, of course. But the Merry Widow sailor on Miss Lee's head gives an idea of what might be expected if the style was exaggerated, as it is in some cases.

Miss Lee and Miss Rogers happened to be "snapped" while they were out together in their new Spring finery, taking doubtless a natural feminine gratification in the consciousness that their hats and suits were strictly correct.

Miss Lee, who is the left hand figure in the photograph, is wearing the Merry Widow sailor. This explanation is given for the benefit of benighted masculine readers, who may not know a Merry Widow sailor from a [illegible] Timothy [illegible].

Having established this fact, the masculine reader may guess that the other figure is Miss Rogers and that her hat is the "Riverside" example.

Miss Lee is considered one of the smartest and best gowned girls in the younger set. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Lee of Brookline, and is one of the leading spirits in the Vincent Club, and the New Riding Club. She is often heard at the society [illegible], having inherited her mother's musical gifts.

Miss Rogers is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry A. Rogers of Newbury street, and like Miss Lee is a leader in the do[illegible] of the Back Bay junior coterie.

NEW YORK STALWARTS SPLIT OVER BIG TAFT-HUGHES FIGHT

ingly being willing to leave the entire matter of fighting the machine to Brackett, finally Senator White got the floor, and in a bitter speech, filled with acrimonious personalities, assailed the motives behind the Saratoga man.

He declared that he considered the attempt to "shackle" the delegates from Congressional districts to be on a par with other games the Senator had been mixed up in, and intimated that he was endeavoring to secure personal political preferment through the use of the Governor's name.

Convention in Near Riot.

Brackett replied angrily, intimating that he considered the entire resolution a "frame up," and serving notice that if the attitude of the majority was maintained they must be prepared to answer to the party for a defeat in the State next November.

Hisses and cat-calls from the machine men greeted Brackett's speech while the minority members cheered lustily for the speaker. Several times it was impossible to hear on account of the uproar.

After a number of incendiary speeches order was restored and the original platform was finally adopted by an overwhelming majority.

Besides quietly endorsing Hughes it approves the revision of the tariff, [illegible] its friends and in such a way that the interests of the wage earners, the producer and the farmer shall be safeguarded, advocates the employers' liability [illegible], enthusiastically endorses the [illegible] and State administrations and reaffirms the last Republican State and National platforms.

The delegates at large chosen, were General Stewart L. Woodford, former minister to Spain; Seth Low, former Mayor of New York, Frederick R. Hazzard, millionaire manufacturer of Syracuse, and Edward H. Butler, editor of the Buffalo Evening News. All are enthusiastic Hughes men.

How Harsh Physic Wrecks the Bowels

Irritate the skin in any spot frequently and that spot will grow calloused.

That is Nature's means of protection

So with the bowels. When you irritate the lining with salts or "pills," the lining grows hard.

That so retards the natural bowel action that you come to need physic constantly.

And you need a constantly larger dose because of the calloused bowels.

You have the "physic habit."

Cascarets bring the same results gently and naturally—without irritation.

They restore the natural bowel functions, so you don't need them long. And the dose never needs increasing.

They act exactly the same as right living would do.

If the bowels are already calloused, you may need two tablets a day for a time.

But, after that, take one at a time—when you need it.

Cascarets are candy tablets. They are sold by all druggists, but never in bulk. Be sure to get the genuine, with CCC on every tablet. The box is marked like this:

POOREST NOW CAN OWN COUNTRY HOME

Better Opportunities Than Ever to Buy Farms on Reasonable Terms.

HOME BUILDING INCREASES

By the Investigator.

Keep in mind Patriots' Day.

Real estate agents are making unusual preparations this year to give the public advantages over former years. The constant demand, [illegible] the stagnancy in other [illegible] for land and houses, have [illegible] agencies to make Patriots' [illegible] ever one in the history of [illegible].

More people [illegible], and much more, they are willing to buy. The money formerly invested in other projects has been turned into the channels of real estate. It is not the man of means who has caught this fever. It is the average wage earner. [illegible] is seeing where it is better for him to own his own home than to keep on paying rent. A few years ago it required much urging and skill to make the ordinary man buy a lot and build a home of his own. To-day, after he has acquired some property, he is seeking to buy more.

Consequently there has been of late an extraordinary demand for land within easy reach of the cities. [illegible] be purchased at [illegible]. This is the situation at [illegible] Arlington Heights, where [illegible] where from $[illegible] ment of $25 cash and $5 a month. All these lots are [illegible]. They are accessible, centrally located and [illegible] dry land. They are just the lots that appeal to the average man. Money invested here is bound to bring a good return in a few years.

Hundreds Have Bought Them.

There are hundreds who have bought them here and elsewhere in the same vicinity. Edward T. Harrington Company are now willing to close them out with a real benefit to purchasers. Other projects are absorbing their interests, and before they undertake the new ventures under consideration they desire to clear up what they have in hand. So they propose to give the public every advantage to purchase. No one can regret the buying of land in a locality where property is bound to advance.

The same is true of Adams Park, Dorchester, where the Bonelli-Adams Company have extensive interests. Here is a recently developed locality, where homes and business blocks are being erected. The new boulevard will come within a short distance of this spot. Two years ago everything around here were meadows and woods. To-day streets have been cut through and negotiations are under way to get adjoining properties in the vicinity of Allendale road, whereby 100 lots will be open. Already twelve houses are planned for in this district.

To see new homes springing up in these new sections is to be made conscious that the average man is taking readily to the proposal of owning his own home and putting his savings where they will show to the best advantages.

He is a better [illegible] in every way for owning his own home, for where the home is secured by constant economy there is more contentment in the home life, and less of the discouragement that comes to the individual who keeps on year after year paying [illegible] has nothing to show for his expenditures.

Make money [illegible] story. Get your lot in some good neighborhood. Pay for it gradually [illegible] anticipate the time where the place [illegible] your home is the place where [illegible] of a few dollars weekly has made you master of the situation.

Easy to Get to Country.

But, you say, you are tired of the city. You long for the country. Well, in that case you need not think long before making a [illegible] venture. No corporation or trust owns all the land. There is some place waiting for you. [illegible] but take care. These opportunities will not always last. Cheap transportation keeps on every year making these spots more than ever accessible. Electric lines are going to honeycomb outlying districts at no distant day.

There are farms with good houses at prices within the means of the poorest man. The prospect of getting one within a short distance of this city for a trifle over a thousand dollars and two thousand dollars is possible to-day.

Sometimes these places have fifteen or more acres going with them. Will this amount of land be worth anything more in ten or twenty years? Is land going to depreciate in that length of time when it is near a city?

There are people who are land poor, and why are they land poor? They are like bookworms. They are unwilling to sell, and dislike to part with their treasures, whereas a little common sense would put them in the way of clearing a little money.

They have always owned the land, and, like bookworms, they go on keeping it, paying taxes and losing a present opportunity, whereas the cutting up of their superfluous property into lots would yield them a good income.

Deserve to Be "Land Poor."

They are land worms, and deserve to be land poor. You will find them in every town near Boston, and they will tell you blandly they do not see much money in land.

Why? Because they never give themselves the opportunity, nor anybody else the opportunity, to prove that it is not necessary in these days to be "land poor."

When you have more available land than you can control, sell some of it. Some have seized the opportunity, and to-day there are little farms near Boston, at very [illegible] figures, where [illegible] only with [illegible] and [illegible] degree of [illegible] and [illegible] can make a [illegible] living.

E. C. Frost, the Boston representative of E. A. Strout Company, told the Investigator the past week: "Farms are going better than a year ago. People are becoming enlightened to the fact that they can make a better living in the country than in the city. Fluctuation in trade and business drives many people to think of their opportunities in the country and makes them feel that living on a principal in the city, which shall soon be consumed, is radically wrong and discouraging. Our concern sold twenty-five farms this week. These farms are scattered all over New England, and it is a plain indication that sooner or later the average family will awaken to the grander opportunity which the farm life offers for independence and for [illegible] living.

"But the country attracts all types of people. Sometimes the millionaire will invest and own a farm according to his tastes. This involves much expenditure of money. Then unforeseen circumstances will compel him to abandon his farm experience.

"He wants to sell, and he is often obliged to sell at a loss. There is a farm of this description near Bridgewater, thoroughly equipped in every detail which appeals to a [illegible] looking for a [illegible] dwelling [illegible] every modern convenience and surrounded with barn and outbuildings in excellent repair. This type of a place offers unexcelled opportunities for the man of means to content himself with the experience of a farm life, which he may turn into recreation or into a good paying business scheme, as his fancy directs. It is an ideal spot, and will make an excellent Summer residence for someone of means.

"Another place is at Sea View, containing 100 acres, with an unbroken view of the salt water, and a house of sixteen rooms, with all modern improvements. As one stands and views the surroundings here, there is no place so near to Boston which offers such [illegible] for enjoying life to those who can afford the expense of such an undertaking."

Good Chances in Dorchester.

Property for investment within the city limits is constantly coming up. The three houses on [illegible] street, Dorchester, containing three [illegible] each, is a good instance. The [illegible] value of these dwellings is $19,500. [illegible] these and getting a mortgage of $10,000 would leave the purchaser after all expenses on an investment of [illegible] net return of over 9 per cent. These suites are complete in every detail [illegible] arranged and adapted for [illegible] families. The rentals are very reasonable and as an investment, it is one of the most attractive that has been offered in this type of realty for some time.

New houses are selling as fast as completed at Highland station. There is no more popular section near Boston. The houses are all for one family, containing nine rooms and bath. The vacant land in this vicinity will soon be thrown upon the market and arrangements are now being made to open out a section for house lots, and a great boom is anticipated.

F. H. Young, the agent of many properties at Medford, says:

"I can give more for the money here in this city than in any other suburb of Boston. Land is fairly high and is selling from ten to fifty cents a foot. New single houses may be purchased at $2,700 and two apartment houses for $4,200.

"The new electric line soon to be established will give us a run of eight minutes from Sullivan square, and this is attracting many buyers."

Attractions of Westwood.

Westwood, adjoining Dedham, is a very desirable locality for suburban residences. It is a quiet neighborhood and it is seldom that any house can be purchased there, so great has been the demand. The few places for sale are pleasantly located and would make admirable Summer homes.

Waban has been steadily advancing, and the building of several houses on Waban avenue indicate increased interest in single houses of ten rooms and bath. These average in price anywhere from $7,000 to $25,000. Lots sell here from 10 cents a foot and upward.

Seashore lots at South Beach, Edgartown, are selling rapidly. Already one thousand lots have been purchased.

Boston real estate agents do not generally indorse the action of the Detroit Real Estate Board, who have made it a law that all the members of that board are prohibited from soliciting the agency of property after it comes to their knowledge that another member has exclusive agency for such property during the period of such exclusive agency. It is the duty of a member being a purchaser or an applicant for a lease of premises represented by another member to communicate with such member, whose agency is known or ascertained while negotiations are in progress and in all cases to make satisfactory arrangements for a division of commissions.

This law is regarded here as not essential, and would result in many complications in business.

Notes.

Arthur W. Cutler of Cambridge has connected himself with the Edward T. Harrington Co. Mr. Cutler was for several years connected with Professor Pickering at the Harvard Observatory as his assistant, and was for three years in the office of President Eliot, later going into business on his own account. With his extensive acquaintance he will undoubtedly prove a valuable man in Cambridge, the district which he represents for the concern.

A clubhouse will be erected at Marion for the Sippican Tennis Club, from plans by Shepley, Rutan & Coolidge, to cost $15,00. The ground measurement of the building is 80 by 30 feet.

M. F. Cottrell has leased the building numbered 18 to 28 Exchange street, owned by Albert B. Whittier, for a long term of years, and will remodel the first floor and basement for restaurant purposes, from plans by Benjamin Fox.

Charles Davis has ben pastor at various times in People's Temple, Tremont Methodist Church, St. Paul's Church, Lowell, and professor of the Wyoming and New England Conference Seminaries.

GIVE POW WOW DANCE.

Great interest is shown in the Pow wow Dance of the Jefferson club of Ward 20 at Nairilles Halls on Easter Monday night. Many state and city officers will be present as invited guests.

STOCK INVESTORS SCARED; MANIPULATORS RULE MARKET

Professional Appearance of Week's Trading Presages Further Slumps.

Outside of some very decided manipulation New York's stock market was most uninteresting yesterday. Prices were inclined to sell off and at the close the lowest prices of the entire two hours prevailed.

The limelight was switched from the stocks, which have been holding the centre of the stage of late, and the traction stocks came in for some attention. Even in these stocks, which were the specialties, the trading was of a lifeless sort and it was almost impossible to trace any signs of public participation.

The belief is becoming general among the majority of the market followers that the market is being manipulated, and there were certainly enough signs pointing that way yesterday. Many declare that the market is just now selling at a false level and that a further drop in prices is due. Short sellers and the bears are happy.

Reading led the list in sales and, strange to say, there was a recovery in the price of this stock from the opening quotation. The first price was 105⅝, and later 106¼ was registered. The advance did not last long, however, and 105⅝ was quoted before the close the last price, being a small fraction above the lowest.

Standard After U. P.

Union Pacific presented a firm front and it was rumored that this stock was being purchased for Standard Oil interests. This did not help the stock very much when the market started downward and in company with the rest of the list a loss of about a point was in orded.

Amalgamated was also under pressure and lost a point to 58, Inter-Metropolitan was strong and so was American Ice, these two stocks standing out, from the rest of the list.

Conditions were rather mixed in the local stock market yesterday, the copper stocks being inclined to slide off somewhat while the general list advanced. At the close this state of affairs was very marked and while some specialties in the general list were showing gains of a point or over, the copper stocks were selling off steadily.

Trading was quiet and what little business was transacted was stamped "professional." The upsetting of business throughout the country has not as yet been forgotten, and there is a marked antipathy on the part of the public to come into the stock market.

There were more shares of Amalgamated sold yesterday than was the case in any other issue.

Bingham Takes Jump.

The slight drop in Amalgamated influenced the rest of the list more or less and as a result declines were recorded in nearly every other copper stock. Boston Consolidated sold off ⅛ a point to 11⅛.

There were large qantities of Bingham Consolidated stock dumped on the market and this stock seemed to find purchasers readily. The price rose from 75 cents to $1, but the large quantity of stock offered for sale at this figure was too much and the price sagged again to 80 cents. Butte Coalition was quiet and fairly firm at 20½, Copper Range was in line with the rest of the coppers and showed a decline of about ⅝ of a point to 64⅛, Greene-Cananea strong at 8½.

In the general list American Telephone was accorded more attention than is usually given a stock in this department, but the trading was not extremely beneficial to the price of the stock and a loss of one point and a quarter was recorded.

United Fruit came in for some trading also, but the course of this stock was upward. From an opening price of 127½, the stock advanced until 129½ was quoted.

Metal Market Upset.

From all appearances the metal market is far from being in a settled condition. Last week there was hardly a day passed that the bid price was not clipped fractionally and the result is that the close of the week finds the price of copper at 13 cents flat.

As was expected, the statement of the New York Associated banks was a good one.

Rates in the money market are still showing a tendency to decline. There is a lack of borrowers. Money is lying idle in the banks, and there is not any demand for the funds. The foreign situation is unchanged.

INSIDERS ALL BEARS NOW

By Thomas C. Shotwell.

NEW YORK, April 11.—The selling of stocks is being done so openly and sincerely that professional Wall Street refuses to see the truth and insists upon buying more eagerly every day. The speculators are all bullish and the insiders are all conservatively bearish. That is all there is to the stock market just now.

Sober people in Wall Street believe that the stock market should be permitted to rest the next three months and gather strength for the revival. Whatever excitement is forced this Spring will be so much subtracted from the vitality of business next Autumn.

TENNESSEE DRIVES OUT STANDARD OIL

Trust Is Found Guilty on 1,524 Counts of Violation of Anti-Trust Law.

Nashville, Tenn., April 11.—Found guilty on 1,524 counts of violating the anti trust act of 1903, the Standard Oil Company to-day was ousted from Tennessee. The supreme court handed down the decision. Atorneys Eddy, Miller and Bond, for the trust, were surprised. They deemed victory certain for them. The decision means the loss of a business worth $500,000 a month to the oil combine.

While the Standard has been refused permission to do business in Texas, Ohio and Kansas, it has managed to get back again. In the Tennessee case, Attorney-General Charles T. Cates declares that never will the bars be lifted to the trust.

Attorney-General Cates brought his suits against the Standard, April 17, 1907. The cases were taken before Judge John E. McCall. If a fine is imposed on each count the total will be $1,000,000 more than the famous Landis fine of 29,000,000.

The suits were against the Standard Oil Company of Indiana. The attorneys for the oil trust averred that the company had never established an agency in Tennessee.

RED SOX MAKE BIG RALLY IN EIGHTH, SCORING SEVEN

Up to That Time Columbus's Champs Looked Like Sure Winners Over McGuire's Boys.

By A. H. C. MITCHELL.

Columbus, Ohio, April 11.—With a grand rally in the eighth inning this afternoon the Red Sox put the game on ice, scoring seven runs in that round. Up to that stage of the game Columbus had the better of the argument, drawing a couple of tallies in the first round. The Bostons slowly tied things up, but the runs came hard, and when in the first of the eighth Columbus got its third run across the pan, there didn't seem to be a chance for the Deacon's men, as things were not breaking well for them.

But in the eighth there were some great crashings of bats and some rapid scurrying of feet around the bases, and it was soon apparent that Billy Clymer's men were up against it. Pruett led off with a drive that Odwell found too hot to hold. Thoney came along with a bunt and Linke threw the ball to the right field bleachers. Pruiett scored on the error and Thoney got around to third. Lord's short fly to left kept Thoney on third, but that made only one out.

Linke grew wild and soaked Sullivan in the ribs with a pitched ball. Then there were lively times. Gessler singled to centre, scoring Thoney. Laporte put an easy fly to right, but Bunk Congalton lost the ball in the sun and it dropped safe. Unglaub lined a terrific swat between Jackson and Kruger for three bases, sending in Gessler and Laporte. Wagner kept the music going with another triple to centre, scoring Unglaub, and Criger put Wagner across the plate with a sacrifice fly to Jackson. Seven runs were in and Pruiett ended the fun with a pop fly to Kahl.

RED SOX FIELD WELL.

The Red Sox fielded in fine style, the only error being one by Harry Lord, who in attempting to catch a man at the plate hit the runner in the back with the ball. There were no sensational fielding stunts, but all the Boston boys handled the ball well considering the high wind that prevailed.

Chubby Charlie Pruiett pitched the entire game. He got in bad at the start, and for a time it looked as though the two runs scored by Columbus in the first inning would be plenty. Pruiett passed Jackson for a starter, but the runner was forced by Kruger on a tap to Lord. Odwell got in a Texas leaguer to left, the wind carrying the ball over Wagner's head. Bunk Congalton, always a dangerous man, drove the ball down the left field foul line for two bases and Kruger scored. Kihm hit to Lord, who soaked Odwell in the back trying to get him at the plate.

Kahl rapped to Laporte, who threw to Criger. Congalton was run down at third.

With two down in the first Sullivan walked, stole, but Doc Gessler struck out, much to the amusement of his friends on the right field bleachers. Doc played on the Columbus team last year.

Boston got back the run in the second. Laporte led off with a single and took second on Unglaub's out. Kahl fumbled Wagner's grounder. Laporte then scored on Criger's out at first.

In the seventh the Red Sox tied the score. With one down Unglaub drove a [illegible] to right, took [illegible] on Wagner's [illegible] and scored on a passed ball. In the first of the eighth Columbus took the lead again. Jackson [illegible] Thoney and Sullivan [illegible] Kruger [illegible] Odwell scored the run [illegible] Sullivan.

Then came the eighth and the slaughter.

Jack Taylor in Box.

Old Jack Taylor, the former National League pitcher, was in the box for Columbus for six innings, and while he was there the Red Sox found his change of pace very puzzling.

Manager [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] was soft and [illegible] the Bostons had [illegible] [illegible] [illegible].

There was only a small crowd out, as although the day was bright, there was a cold wind blowing. The beautiful Columbus ball grounds were in fine shape and never looked better.

During the game workmen were digging a hole in centre field where there will be an immense flag pole.

Columbus won the American Association pennant last season. There's going to be a great flag raising when the championship season opens here next Wednesday.

Many former big leaguers are enrolled with Columbus this season.

There are Congalton, who played right field for the Boston Americans at one time; Jack Taylor, the St. Louis and Chicago National League pitcher; Kruger and Odwell, former [illegible] [illegible] Reds, and Jackson and Kahl, who at one time played on the Cleveland team.

[illegible] the Red Sox will play their last exhibition game and at 10 o'clock Sunday night they start for home.

Ed Cicotte is billed to pitch the entire game, but George Winter will be held in reserve [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] get too busy with their bats.

Eddie [illegible] did not report at the grounds this afternoon and Manager McGuire immediately wired Cy Young, who is in charge of the Yannigans at Wheeling, W. Va., to send Carrigan here by the first train. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] tomorrow's game, as McGuire wants to save [illegible] for the opening spill on the Huntington avenue grounds next Tuesday.

HOLY CROSS IS BADLY BEATEN

Princeton Tigers Take Worcester Collegians Into Camp, 10 to 1.

Princeton, N. J., April 11.—Princeton ball tossers were in great form this afternoon and held the strong Holy Cross nine to one run. The final score was 10 to 1. Heyniger, who twirled for Princeton, was freely hit, the hits being scattered and never materialized. Mansfield, the Holy Cross slab artist, proved easy for the Tigers and was hit all over the lot. Heyniger's home run and Harlan's three-bagger were the features of the game.

The visitors scored their only run in the first inning on a free pass by Heyniger. Fish played a star game, getting on base four out of five times and covering the initial bag in excellent style. The score:

REVERE HIGH BEATEN.

In a loosely played game at Revere yesterday afternoon the High School of Commerce defeated Revere High by 8 to 7. Callahan, who was in the box for the visitors, was very effective, fanning twelve of the opposing batsmen. He also figured in the run getting for his team. Sweeny also played a good game for Commerce High, getting four hits. For Revere Haynes showed up well, making two difficult catches in left field, while Wilfert and Reppito also played well. CY YOUNG'S COLTS WINNERS 2 TO 1

Special to the Sunday American.

Wheeling, W. Va., April 11.—The Wheeling Central League team put up a good argument against the Boston Americans Yannigans today, and the major leaguers won out by the score of 2 to 1. Maire did the box work for the visitors and had few bad spots, pitching in the main and good consistent ball.

Boston scored in the sixth on Carlisle's safe bunt, a passed ball and a hit by McConnell. In the eighth they scored another when Maire was hit by a pitched ball, Carlisle got a Texas leaguer and McConnell an infield hit. Wheeling's run was scored on two hits and bad throws by McConnell and Maire.

In the game between the two clubs Sunday Harry M[illegible] of Martins Ferry, Ohio, just across the river from Wheeling, will pitch for Boston. Score:

MORAN WINS PACED RACE FROM BUTLER

Both Riders Get Bad Falls on Track and Butler Is Badly Shaken Up.

A couple of nasty spills added sensation to the fifteen mile motor paced match race between Jimmy Moran and Nat Butler at the Park Square cycle track last night, which the former won by nearly two miles. Both riders went down on the track at different times, but Butler got the worst of the tumbles and towards the end of the race he went down a second time and was forced to stop, which allowed Moran to win by a larger margin.

Moran worked a pretty trick at the start on the standing method of getting away by jumping in front of Butler after the latter had caught on to his motor. He went out at a fast clip and inside of a mile was trailing within a quarter of a lap of Butler, but did not attempt to go by. On the fifth mile Moran punctured a tire and sprawled on the track, damaging his wrist, but jumped on a sprint wheel after losing six laps. On the eleventh mile Butler's motor, with Shultz up, had a tire explosion and pacemaker and Butler were hurled to the boards.

He lost all the ground he had gained on Moran before he could get started behind a spare motor. He was pretty well shaken by the fall, and after riding a couple of miles toppled off his wheel, exhausted.

Peter Drobeck, with a large handicap, won the amateur mile sprint. H[illegible] and [illegible] Stoughton were tied for third.

Anderson, the only scratch man, won his heat in the fast time of 1:00 3-5 in the mile professional sprint, but was beaten in the final by George Wiley with fifty yards.

Anderson made a hard try for the [illegible] professional, losing by inches to [illegible] in an exciting finish. The summaries:

Mile handicap, amateur—First heat, [illegible] Cameron, scratch; second, P. [illegible]; third, J. J. Mc[illegible] [illegible] yards. Time, [illegible]. Second heat won by F. Hill, scratch; [illegible] McFarland (70 yards), third, [illegible]. Time, 2:18 2-5s. Final won by Peter Drobeck (90 yards); second, [illegible] [illegible] (55 yards); third, tie between [illegible] (30 yards) and F. Hill, scratch. Time, 2:07 3-5s.

Half-mile professional handicap—First heat won by Anderson, scratch; second, [illegible] (50 yards); third, Eddie Root [illegible]. Time, 1:00 3-5s. Second heat won by [illegible] [illegible] yards; second, Hugh McLean (70 yards); third, F. F. Logan (35 yards). Time, [illegible]. Final heat won by George Wiley [illegible]; third, McLean. Time, 1:00 [illegible].

Ten-mile professional, open—Won by [illegible]; second, Anderson; third, [illegible]. Time, 24:32 2-5s.

But the wind [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the defeat of Boston [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the Trenton [illegible] as for the Doves. The Trenton club [illegible] good one [illegible] has a number of well known [illegible] major leaguers on its staff and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] with [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] a pennant race.

Manager Jack Carey is well known in Boston and to baseball fans all over New England. He is a native of Salem and has a cigar store in Manchester, N. H. Among the Trenton players [illegible] Daniel McCarthy, who [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] did not play today [illegible] [illegible] and Westerberg are known in Boston as former members of the National [illegible] [illegible] there. Hoey is a former Holy Cross player and was with the Boston Americans last season. Caffyn came here from the Cleveland club and Magoon is an old major leaguer. In fact, the local [illegible] [illegible] a bunch that no club can trifle with.

Doves' Fast Double Play.

There was no scoring in the first inning and the last half was signalized by a fast double play when Caffyn sent a hard ball to Kelley, who got it to Ritchey in time to stop Ripp at second and nail the Trenton hitter at first. Later in the game Caffyn fell over the first sack and badly hurt his left leg. He was replaced in the game by [illegible].

Trenton scored in the last half of the third inning after Murray had hit to right field for a base and stole second. There were two out when Ritchey let Rapp's grounder get away from him, and that gave Murray a chance to cross the plate.

In the next inning Trenton got another run when Strang, who had walked, came home on Murray's wallop to left for two sacks. Fast work by Boston prevented Magoon from scoring ten. He had hit for a base, but the two-bagger was made [illegible] [illegible] [illegible].

The [illegible] [illegible] piled on the agony in the fifth [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] a great [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] Caffyn bunted and [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] first. Hoey [illegible] Sweeney [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] Kelley at short [illegible] Jones [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] home. Then Wester[illegible] [illegible] to Sweeney [illegible] [illegible] play and [illegible] [illegible].

In fact, the fielding of the two third basemen [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] bright spot of a [illegible].

AMHERST AGGIES DEFEAT BROWN

Nourse Touched Up in Sixth by Winners for Their Six Runs.

Providence, April 11. The Amherst Aggies defeated Brown today by a score of 6 to 3. Throughout the whole game a stiff northwest gale caused the players to misjudge balls and make many errors. Cobb, the Amherst pitcher, held the Brown batters for only two scratch hits. Nourse was touched up for seven hits. In the sixth he lost control of the ball and before he recovered Amherst scored 6 runs. Up to this time neither side had scored.

Brown scored its 3 runs in the sixth and seventh innings, and had excellent opportunities to score in the eighth, as the first two Brown men up got singles, but Cobb struck out the next two men and caused the third to fly out.

YALE DEFEATED BY THE GIANTS

New York, April 11.—For just four innings to-day the Yale collegians had a look in with the New York Nationals, but after that the Giants made a runaway race of it and easily defeated the collegians in the first ball game on the local grounds this season.

It was a well played game throughout, the collegians playing an errorless game in the field, while New York's only misplay was charged to Devlin, who made a poor throw to first which incidentally gave the Yale their only run of the game.

Before the beginning of the Yale game the Giant colts played a four inning game with the New York Athletic Club, and won in a canter by a score of 14 to 3. Score.

INDIA PANIS WON IN FIVE HEATS AT FRANKLIN FIELD

Thirty-Five Horses Started, Requiring Sixty-Two Heats, at Dorchester Driving Club Matinee.

BY EDWARD E. COGSWELL

With the wind a howling gale over the Franklin Field speedway yesterday, it was wonderful that enough of the members of the Dorchester Driving Club could be induced to brave the elements in deciding [illegible] races, in which thirty-five horses took the word and sixty-two heats were required in finding the winners. M. F. Maher met the best success of any, as he started Hazel D., Lady Pinewood and Mary Shedd, and secured a blue ribbon with each.

Good old reliable India Panis, owned and driven by George A. French, carried off the honors in the most exciting of the trotting events, it taking him five heats to get the measure of Baron Patch and Robert T. The victory was a distinct feather in the cap of Mr. French, but so close was the race that the defeated horses came in for a lot of glory themselves. India Panis was rigged for all there was in it, as he drew a brand new road cart and wore a new Sonoma Girl harness.

There were a couple of five-heat battles in the pacing division, Fred Bellows going the limit in winning with Hegamite over Captain Hall, and Lady Pinewood barely escaping with the scalp of Sunrise after having [illegible] two heats.

"Where Is He?" Cried Bellows.

Mr. Bellows had to drive for his very life, but had breath enough left at the conclusion of the fifth to yell when finishing, "Where is he?" This made the crowd laugh, as N. [illegible] was [illegible] after [illegible]. It is likely that Lady Pinewood would have been [illegible] the summary except that Owner Maher got John Trout to drive after the second heat. The skill of the veteran professional was instantly [illegible] in the following heat, being in the mare's favor.

In the trot and pace classes a five-heat contest was between Robert, Derby and Gray Jim. The South Boston delegation yelled themselves red [illegible] to root Dr. John MacDonald [illegible] with Derby, but after getting [illegible] of heats he was compelled to surrender to B. F. Tuttle's trotter Robert in the fifth by a narrow margin.

However, South Boston was not left without something to crow about around the [illegible] as [illegible] Oakland King over Queen Crest [illegible] the third [illegible] the next, making the mare go [illegible] early in the [illegible]

Helen Dare the Right Goods.

John W. Linnehan produced a winner in Helen Dare [illegible] was [illegible] Wilkes and [illegible]. She made a very favorable impression with the horsemen by tramping it off [illegible]. She looks like the ideal material for a coming race trotter.

There was a couple against time performances through the listed candidates opposed to B. S. Dillon and Wilkesbrino not coming to the scratch. The former stepped the course in 30½, a great feat, considering the high wind, while Wilkesbrino accomplished his stunt by pacing in 32¼.

H. C. Thayer [illegible] taking first over Sir George, the nineteen-year-old trotting gelding with Altro L., and that the former could make his conqueror step twice in 33 shows there is many a fast heat left in him yet, despite his years. The Billy Bashford-Mutineer race was a corker. While the former won three out of the four heats, yet the pair was lapped each trip [illegible] One heat was raced in 32.

Other winners of the afternoon were Miss Wilkes, Edith J., Hazel D., Mary Shedd, Prince of Monica and Matt M. Edith J. marched a heat in the good time of [illegible] against Matt M. R. [illegible] Richardson started his Woodshed colt, Fred R., for his first race.

Judges Should Award Trophies.

The Dorchesters have had placed in the judges' stand a public telephone. For the reference of any wishing to keep the number in mind, it is Dorchester 1470-1. It seems to be the wish of most of the [illegible] the [illegible] Judge [illegible] Walter W. [illegible] of the race. It would save the trouble of having to drive the length of the speedway [illegible] the judges.

Fred H. Bellows [illegible] anxious to match his pacing mare, Ashland Bett, 2:21¾, against any pacer in Greater Boston, with no faster record, for fun or marbles, the race to come off at either Combination Park or the Charles River Speedway. He would specially like to hear from those who have been claiming that his mare is pretty near to nothing in the way of having extreme speed, and thus easy to beat by almost any ordinary wiggler.

Among the visitors yesterday was John H. Hayes, one of the leading members of the Manchester, N. H., Driving Club, who [illegible] greatly interested in the sport. It was learned, too, that "Uncle Jack" Bowen is the guest of Lewis Whitaker at his Roxbury home. Mr. Bowen is looking in fine health, despite his eighty-one years, and says that he can drive a race right now just as good as ever in his life.

The Old Colony Driving Club will open its season on April 20 at the South Weymouth track. Through the season it will race every Saturday. Nearly a hundred members are enrolled in the club, quite a few being those who, too, belong to the Dorchesters. In this way the picking of Saturdays for race days is bound to be harmful to both organizations, as these members belonging to both clubs will be compelled to drop racing at one or the other. McFarland's fight was excellently clever [illegible] battle [illegible] flustered at any stage and every punch he sent landed [illegible] contributed to his ultimate success. [illegible] About the only thing Britt can be given credit for to-day was pure grit. He lunged distance badly and floundered a great deal. He took his medicine, however, like a man.

Fight by Rounds.

ROUND ONE—Britt led for the stomach and was blocked. The boys then clinched. Britt tried again and again with the same punch, unsuccessfully. Jimmy got in with light left on the face. The boys then clinched and Mac put in a right on the stomach. Packy showed cleverness in getting away from Britt's left body blows with left and right. The native son got with left and right. The native son got in a hard left on the stomach and the lads clinched. McFarland seemed to be sparring and boxing cautiously. Both ducked cleverly and there were quite a number of clinches. Mac put in another left hook on the face and they were clinched at the bell.

Loop-the-Loop Punch.

ROUND TWO—Both led with left and clinched. Britt got in a body blow with left and Mac uppercut him with the right while [illegible] were holding. It was a loop the loop punch, and Packy used it several times before they broke away. Britt threw a left to the stomach and they clinched. There was clever blocking on both sides. Packy reached [illegible] with two stiff uppercuts in a clinch and used both hands on the side of the head. Britt was in [illegible] and Packy rapped him on the jaw with a free right. They began [illegible] and Mac covered up. The Chicago boy had a shade the better of the round.

JOE GANS READY TO FIGHT M'FARLAND IF THE PURSE IS BIG ENOUGH

Baltimore, Md., April 11.—Joe Gans, champion lightweight of the world, when informed to-night of the victory of Packey McFarland over Jimmy Britt, was asked if he would fight the Chicagoan, as he had [illegible] he would a few weeks ago, if McFarland was successful in his match with Britt.

Gans said that Jimmy Coffroth of California has offered him a match with Packey, but did not stipulate the terms. Joe said he notified Coffroth, telling the California fight promoter that if he would guarantee a certain purse he would take on McFarland. Gans says he named the amount of the guarantee he wished Coffroth to make, but would not say to-night what the amount was. He says he thinks McFarland the greatest fighter in the light weight division outside of himself.

BURNS SURE TO FIGHT JOHNSON

SERIES OF YACHT RACES FOR TROPHY

The Quincy Yacht Club, through [illegible] Commodore, Herbert W. Rollin, last [illegible] issued a challenge to the Corinthian Club of Marblehead to a [illegible] Quincy Yacht Club [illegible] to take place in August.

It hasn't been definitely [illegible] whether the Quincy club [illegible] yacht Manchester, which was the Sally of the Corinthian [illegible] or build a new one. Whether [illegible] or not the members have voted to allow Charles [illegible] to sail the boat.

The Corinthian Yacht Club will most likely sail the yacht called the V[illegible] should an agreement be reached. The Manchester Yacht Club has also issued a challenge for the same cup.

EXETER, 4; ST. ANSELM, 2.

Exeter, N. H., April 11.—Phillips Exeter Academy baseball nine opened its season to-day by defeating the St. Anselm College team, 4 to 2. The weather was very bad for baseball, a strong wind blowing all the time. Balus and Litchfield pitched for Exeter, both doing effective work until the ninth inning, when [illegible] allowing on balls and threw [illegible] two runs to come in. [illegible] good game for St. Anselm. The score:

CRIMSON ATHLETES SHOW FINELY IN HANDICAP GAMES

The Harvard Spring handicap games were run off in the Stadium yesterday afternoon. The terrific gale that swept across the track made any record making impossible. The wind aided the sprinters in the [illegible]-yard dash, however, and Dodge showed his good form in the fast time of [illegible] seconds.

[illegible] was timed in the quarter-mile [illegible] considering the wind, his time of [illegible] seconds was very good. [illegible] 100 [illegible] in the dual meet with Yale.

Although the men have not had [illegible] out-door training and not much was looked for in the way of fast time in this [illegible] the total results go to show that the Crimson track team this year will fulfill the predictions of the Yale News and likely walk away with the dual meet at New Haven.

HARVARD GOES DOWN TO DEFEAT BEFORE VERMONT

Visiting Collegians Too Strong for Crimson and Win Game 9 to 5.

It was an inauspicious opening for Harvard on the diamond yesterday, as the Crimson nine went down to defeat before the University of Vermont by the score of 9 to 5.

A more undesirable day for playing a ball contest could not have been served up [illegible] A terrific wind [illegible] start to [illegible] the [illegible]

[illegible] showed what Harvard expected to meet [illegible] at its best and [illegible] favor of the Vermont [illegible]

Harvard's First Test.

[illegible] Harvard [illegible] the regulars of [illegible] and was steady after the second inning [illegible] heavy hitting was done [illegible] his heads. [illegible] the start [illegible] stumbling block for the locals [illegible] at the outset and [illegible] were [illegible] Si[illegible]

Harvard got two soft runs on errors and a third on a misplay, as Vermont was not as steady [illegible]

It was [illegible] the Harvard supporters [illegible] good showing of some of the [illegible] especially that of [illegible] entire field. He played [illegible] for the team and was [illegible] of the game for the Crimson. He [illegible] a home run, but [illegible] of him and [illegible] and a poor return of the ball to catch him at third by daring base running.

Aronson's Good Work

In the field he handled ground balls like an expert and took two difficult flies which the wind juggled.

McCall was missed at second base, as Keefe was a trifle nervous under fire and did not play the game he is capable of. Lanigan, the old Andover player, got into his stride at the bat after fanning the first time up and contributed a single and a triple.

MELROSE 6; RINDGE 2.

Melrose High defeated Rindge Manual Training School of Cambridge on Melrose Common yesterday afternoon by 6 to 2, in a fast game of baseball. Several free fights in the crowd attending the game added interest to the sport.

McMullin was Melrose star performer. He gave but four hits, struck out 13 men and put the ball over the plate in the face of one of the stiffest winds in local [illegible] Eaton, first baseman for Melrose, was another star, and to his skill and his tries for wild balls, Melrose owes much of [illegible] victory.

Not until the last inning was Rindge able to score. Then they pulled home two runs [illegible] three [illegible] bases and [illegible] McMullin then struck out two men in succession. The score:

AUTO BUSINESS IS BOOMING; DEALERS CAN'T FILL ORDERS.

Great Industry Never Looked Brighter Than Now, Despite Financial Stringency.

By J. C. KERRISON.

[illegible] Whereas a few months ago at the time [illegible] ket might become overstocked, there is now every [illegible] of a veritable dearth of cars [illegible]

The market will not be overstocked. There is bound to be a scarcity of cars, and at least five of the local dealers are already beginning to send up a cry impossible to get cars. This is an absolute fact. There are five dealers in Boston who with in [illegible] have shown the writer that [illegible] enough cars in sight to [illegible] and three of these are men [illegible] high-priced products, cars selling for as great an amount of money as any in the market, while the other two are men [illegible] the low and medium priced product [illegible] is would indicate that the interest is not confined to [illegible] priced product, but rather is extended over the entire line of motor vehicles.

Business Booming.

Since the close of the automobile show the local business has been steadily improving, until today it is, as a whole, as good as it has been at any time in recent years. The number of dealers above referred to shows [illegible] comparative statements which indicated that their business for the last [illegible] present months was greater than for the corresponding period of the previous year, which is decidedly interesting when it is remembered that the early part of 1907 was considered as a banner period.

Many of the factories have resumed business on full time, and there is every reason to believe that 1908 will prove as good a year from a business standpoint as any that have gone before.

The effort to secure an amendment to the present motor registration law of the Commonwealth, suggested in the inaugural of the Governor and supported by the Safe Roads Association, has proven abortive, mainly through the efforts of the legislative committee of the Massachusetts State Automobile Association, a branch of the American Automobile Association. The proposed measure was first given a hearing during the week of the automobile show when the great majority of those interested in the measure were unable to be present. As a result of this hearing the committee voted to recommend a measure taxing machines on a sliding scale, according to horsepower and a sub-committee was appointed to draft a law. The proposed law was drafted, but when it came to an acceptance by the joint committee it failed and was given leave to withdraw. This reversal of the original vote was brought about by the clear, logical and equitable arguments used against the measure by the men of the State Association, none the least energetic of whom was A. D. Converse of Winchendon, a former member of the Legislature.

[illegible] had excellent arguments [illegible] such a proposition they pointing [illegible] had caused $10,000 more damage to the roads than [illegible] and horse-drawn vehicles, the motorists had, through the requirements of the law, paid to the State 4[illegible] per cent of the cost of maintenance of the roads during the four months of the operation of the law in 1907, and the horse-drawn vehicles had not contributed one single cent. The cost of road maintenance last year was but $4,000 more than it was in 1902, when not a single automobile was registered, the registration law not going into effect until the year following.

No New Laws Needed.

There is really no need of further legislation on the registration requirements, not even to secure greater revenue for the repair and maintenance of roads, as under the present law there will be something like $80,000 raised this year. The cost of maintenance of roads last year amounted to $105,000, being in round numbers an increase of $32,000 over the cost of the previous year. Should the same increase be experienced in the present year the cost of maintenance will amount to something like $137,000; over 50 per cent. of which will be secured under the present system of automobile registration. It is difficult to convince the great body of motorists of the fairness of making them pay over 50 per cent. of the cost of road maintenance, as well as the tax on motors as personal property assessed by the cities or towns in which they may reside. Of course there are certain owners who would be glad to pay an increased cost for registration, as they believe that if under the law they are to pay $15 for registration whereas others only pay $5 and $10, there is not a judge in the land but would feel that they are paying the increased price for one purpose alone—that of going faster.

However, be that as it may, there is now every reason to believe that there will be no change in the automobile registration law during the present session of the Legislature.

At least there will be no subterfuge about the Glidden "tour" this year. It will set forth as an avowed contest, open to all, but with chief consideration given to the manufacturers, whose support makes it practicable. There will be no wire-pulling committee to squabble with, but the man who has thus far proven most capable will be the manager. Chairman Frank B. Hower has demonstrated the possession of two important qualities—the desire to be impartial and a willingness to accept responsibility and be imperious in the field of action. They dubbed him "Napoleon Hower" in the tour last year, but wound up by praising him for his achievements, and he will take charge this Summer with the full confidence of all who followed his pace last July.

BURMAN WILL RACE IN EAST

Fearless Western Driver to Make His Home in New York.

Robert Burman, who for the past four years, has been driving the Jackson racing machines for the Jackson of the George Jackson Scott Motor Company, No. 1720 Broadway, New York, agents for Automobile Company, has joined the forces of the Jackson, and will drive for them in all the races in which the Jackson will be entered the coming season.

Mr. Burman has the reputation in the West of being one of the nerviest and best track drivers in the country. He has won many important events for the Jackson Company, and holds many records, among them the twenty-four hour record on a half-mile track made at St. Louis, July 3d and 4th, 1907.

GETTING READY FOR BRIARCLIFF RACE

Twenty-Two Stock to Start in Three Hundred-Mile Contest on April 24.

Less than two weeks now intervene before the running of the Briarcliff trophy contest in Westchester county, New York, which race gives every evidence of being the most interesting road event which has taken place in the last two years, or since the running of the last contest for the Vanderbilt cup.

The race will be started at 4:30 o'clock on the morning of April 24. The total list of twenty-two entrants will undoubtedly be at the starting tape; and from the time when the last of the twenty-two stock cars start upon its thirty-mile circuit there will not be a dull moment in the race. The distance of the contest is to be 300 miles. It will not be completed until noon or later.

The Briarcliff trophy stock car contest is the first large road race with anything like a large field to be contested in America, though it would seem that we are to have more of these in the future. All the drivers who are to compete are now exercising and tuning up their cars on the course.

Course a Hard One.

The universal opinion of the contestants is that the course will be a difficult one to drive and that it will require the most careful handling of the machines. On the comparatively straight stretches (there are no real straightaways) fairly good time can be made, but owing to the many turns and curves in the race-roads, it is believed that the average speed for the race will not be more than forty miles an hour. But to make this average will require hair-raising chances and the most careful manipulation of the steering wheel.

General interest in the race increases by leaps and bounds. The official grandstand is well under way. Already there has been an active demand for seats, and about a thousand of these and a number of boxes have already been taken at the secretary's office in the Bryant Park building, New York. All the hotel accommodations in the vicinity of the course have been engaged, but it is believed that uncomfortable congestion will be averted by the expedient of running trains every fifteen minutes after 11 o'clock of April 23, the night before the race.

Prominent Autoists to See It.

The representation of prominent automobilists from various centres throughout the East and central parts of the country will be greater than at any time since the New York shows were in full blast. A large contingent will journey from the Pacific Coast for the event and Canada will contribute an unusual number of visitors, according to advices received from Canadian cities.

The contract for the oiling of the entire thirty miles of road was let last week and this work and that of repairing and banking the roads is being pushed by night and day squads of workers. There is an immense amount of detail work in connection with the preparations for the contest and the erection of signs and telephone stations, the plans for the proper policing of the course, etc., are all demanding much of the time of the committee in charge of the contest. Most active among the workers are Robert Lee Morrell, the chairman of the committee and T. F. Moore, the secretary and manager. These gentlemen are well-nigh living upon the course.

The eleventh hour entries of a second Simplex, a Benz, a second Renault, and a Lancia, bring the total number of entries to twenty two. Of these eleven are American, six Italian, three French, one Austrian, and one German.

STEVENS-DURYEA TOOK THE HONORS

The "Big" and "Little" Stevens-Duryea "Sixes" swept everything before them in the gasolene classes at the Fort George Hill climb on Thursday last, easily winning in their respective classes. Besides capturing the leading honors in its particular class the Big Six established the best time for gasolene cars during the day, defeating cars of greater horse power, among which were at least two Briarcliff candidates.

Both cars entered by the Stevens-Duryea people were regular stock cars, there not being a single change in any part from the stock model. The success achieved by these cars is particularly gratifying to J. W. Bowman, the local distributer, especially in view of the fact that they were in open competition with something like seventy-two cars, representing the best that is manufactured by the leading foreign and domestic makers. The work of these cars was, however, repetition of their performances of a year ago, when they carried everything before them, proving conclusively that during the past twelve months the Chicopee concern has kept abreast of the times.

YALE SOCCERS TOO FAST FOR HARVARD

Elis Take Kicking Game on Soldiers Field, 1 to 0.

Yale defeated Harvard on Soldiers Field in a soccer football game yesterday afternoon by a score of 1 to 0. It was the initial game between the two in this branch of sport and the rivalry was keen, as several men on both teams had faced each other in other sports. It was a fast and clean game at all times. Harvard outweighed Yale, but what Yale lacked in weight they made up in speed, keeping the ball in Harvard's territory the entire first half.

Yale won the toss and chose the west goal with a strong wind at their back, but it was near the end of the first half before Jennings received the ball, after some clever team work by the wearers of the blue, and by a pretty kick caged the only goal of the game.

The New Haven boys displayed a more thorough knowledge of the fine points of the game than did the Crimson, but both teams were greatly bothered by the high wind. Captain Wick and Noyes played the best game for Yale, while Brooks and Grant played well for Harvard. Summary:

WHITE STEAMER FIRST IN CLIMB

The White Steamer placed another great hill-climbing victory to its credit on Thursday, April 9, by winning the hill-climb held in conection with the New York Automobile Carnival. The White made the 1900-foot ascent, from a standing start, in 32 1-5 seconds, as compared with the best gasoline time of 36 seconds, scored by a car built especially for the Vanderbilt race. The contest brought out an unusually large number of starters, for no less than 72 cars, including most of the prominent American and foreign makes, were timed up the hill.

This is the fifth hill climbing competition which the White has entered since the 30-horse power model was placed upon the market, and it is the fifth which has been won by the White. In each of these contests—at Wilkes-Barre, at Cleveland, at Witter, Cal., at San Francisco and now at New York [illegible] large field of high powered cars competed and on each occasion the 30 horse-power White made the fastest time by [illegible] margin. That the White is the best climbing car in the market has thus been forcibly demonstrated that there is probably no one who questions its superiority in this respect.

WAYNE CO. IS BRANCHING OUT

As the strongest possible indication of the fact of the Wayne Automobile Company has the utmost confidence and faith in the future of the [illegible] industry, the fact needs but be cited that the last of a series of contracts for new machinery to the extent of more than $100,000 was closed last week.

The first of these new machines, a mammoth drill press, has been received and is now in operation, while several other pieces of special machinery are being set up at this time. So confident is the Wayne of the future, that it is rapidly assuming the position of one of the largest and most thoroughly equipped plants in the country.

Not only is there every activity imaginable at the plant in Detroit, but Barney F. Everitt, president of the company, is making an extended tour of the West at this time, visiting a considerable number of new agents recently secured by salesman manager [illegible] D. Porter.

HARVARD GUNNERS BEAT PRINCETON

Princeton, N. J., April 11.—Harvard gunners defeated Princeton here this afternoon in a close shoot, 103 to 100. In the first half [illegible] had the Crimson men, 93 to [illegible] in the second half the tables were [illegible] by Harvard. A high wind blew across the course, making good scores impossible. Brewer of Harvard made the best individual score, killing forty-two out of fifty birds. Summary:

Princeton—Wheeler, 35; Latta, 40; Wood, 39; Westenhaven, 36; Wright, 40. Total, 190.

TRANSCONTINENTAL SHOW.

Should the independent makers carry out the proposed plan of abandoning the annual New York and Chicago shows and displaying their new models in an exhibition train, visiting all the large cities, they will thereby pay a large compliment to the Winton company, which blazed the way. In 1905 the Winton Model K was shown from coast to coast in a specially equipped exhibition railway car, and the enterprise was so successful that it was repeated in 1907, when two railway cars, one in the East and one in the West, were used to carry the new six cylinder Six Teen Six to the chief automobile centres of the country.

WOONSOCKET'S NINE.

Woonsocket, April 11.—Woonsocket's Atlantic League team will open up its schedule April 20 and will play several games all over New England before returning to Woonsocket. The first regular game here will be played May 2.

OUTLOOK BRIGHT IN TIRE TRADE

Hartford Rubber Works Co. Factory Working Overtime to Fill Orders.

The Hartford Rubber Works Company, who are large manufacturers of automobile tires, say that orders are becoming very brisk just now as the warm Spring days are bringing out all of the cars from the garages and owners are getting them equipped with new tires for the Summer.

J. D. Anderson, president of the Hartford Rubber Works Company, stated that owners are commencing to realize that it is real economy at the beginning of the season to equip their cars all around completely with new tires, having the old ones, including tubes, repaired for use as extras.

placed on the market last Fall has become very popular, and the Midgley tread the Hartford Rubber Works Company says, has met with big success and is an all-the-year-round tire. Those who have used them in Winter will not have their car fitted with anything else in Summer.

Mr. Anderson states that the outlook for a brisk renewal business and also equipment for new cars is good. "In fact," said he, "our factory is working overtime in order to keep up with the orders."

WHITE CARS FOR NAVY AMBULANCES

The United States Navy Department has purchased two automobile ambulances from the White Company of Cleveland. One of these is for use at the Naval Hospital at Philadelphia and the other at the Tuberculosis Hospital at Los Animas, Colorado. The new ambulances are similar to those which have been purchased from time to time by the War Department from the White Company.

In fact, the splendid service given by the White ambulances in army work was the determining factor in the award of this new contract by the Navy Department. The chassis of the two new ambulances are identical with those of the standard thirty horsepower White touring cars, except that the frame is lengthened out, increasing the wheel base to 132 inches. The new ambulances have a capacity of four stretchers, besides accommodations for several surgeons and space for carrying a considerable quantity of medical supplies.

SELDEN CAR GREAT, H. C. CASTLE SAYS

With Five Passengers It Easily Climbs Corey Hill, Beating a Higher Power Motor.

The Selden car, bearing the name of the famous inventor of the gasoline automobile, a strictly high grade car, designed to meet the growing requirements for something good at a medium or popular price is the latest acquisition of H. C. & C. D. Castle. [illegible] Castle said. "It is the greatest little propo[illegible] Boston. We [illegible] model the principal aim has been to pro[illegible] the minimum cost and give the customer the greatest amount of satisfaction. The first cost of a large car is by no means the greatest. The upkeep very often exceeds the purchase price and the pleasure derived is in no sense greater than that of the modest owner of a medium-priced car. A car that will run the season through with little or no expense for repairs is the car that is sure to win the greatest favor. Such a car is the Selden. Built of the very best of materials, by experienced and expert labor, with every improvement in design and mechanism brought up to date, we offer more value for the money than any other manufacturer either in or outside of the Licensed Association.

"It is an excellent hill climber, light weight, tire-saver, noiseless and smooth running, very stylish in appearance, of great strength, fine finish, ample power and complete dust protection. In support of our claims, we guarantee our Model 28 to be free from imperfections in material and construction for one year."

The engine is of the four cylinder type, with cylinders offset from crank shaft and valves placed on the right side, locating the carburetor, timer and magneto convenient for connections. All valves are made of nickel steel and all bronze and brass parts are of the best grade of metal. The oiling system is automatic, while the water pump is of the centrifugal type.

The ignition system is of the jump spark type with a roller timer mounted on the upper end of the oil pump shaft. The coil box is of the new type consisting of four unit coils all operated by single trembler of large size. Each coil is provided with a testing key whereby each cylinder may be tested without danger of altering the adjustment of the trembler. These coils are known as the Synchronized type and have solved the problem of igniting multi-cylinder gasoline engines in a manner that compares for uniformity of sparks and correctness of timing very favorably with the best magnetos, while at the same time, the engine may be run much slower than with a magneto.

The clutch is of the well known leather-faced cone type, and is supported on its seat. It is connected to the gear box by a universal joint, which permits of large variations in alignment between the engine and the gear box without binding any bearing or affecting the seating of the clutch. If when new the clutch should engage too strongly, the leather should be well soaked in Neatsfoot oil. After a few treatments of this sort, the leather will be found to remain soft and pliable, and the engagement will take place with great smoothness. The levers between the clutch spring and the pedals are such that very slight effort is required for disengagement and the car therefore can be easily operated by a woman and the clutch held out on long hills without fatigue.

Two sets of brakes are provided, both mounted directly on the rear wheels. The external brakes are of the flexible band form, and the internal brakes are of the solid shoe form expanded against the inside of the frame by means of a cam.

Both sets act with equal force, whether the car is going forward or backward.

GOTCH KEEPS IT UP.

Chicago, April 11.—Frank Gotch, the world's wrestling champion, threw four ambitious young wrestlers in 11 minutes and 20 seconds at a local theatre last night. He had agreed to throw them in twenty minutes. The men were Joe Rickard, Adolph Ernest, Young Hackenschmidt and Martin Bloom.

MOTORCYCLISTS WILL HOLD BIG RUN — NEW CARS THE CASTLES TO SELL SELDEN — RACE BRIARCLIFF NEXT BIG CONTEST — AUTO NOTES

A. A. A. ANNUAL TOUR WILL START FROM BUFFALO JULY 9

Not Known Yet Whether the Autoists Will Pass Through Boston.

The annual tour of the American Automobile Association will not hereafter be officially known as the Glidden tour, instead it is to be designated as the Fifth Annual Reliability Touring Contest of the American Automobile Association, including the contest for the Glidden and Hower trophies.

The tour will start at Buffalo on July 9 and end at Saratoga on July 24. As to the route it will traverse the chairman is as yet silent, although it is difficult to see from what he has already stated how it is possible to exclude Boston from the route. Still almost everything is possible where the A. A. A. is concerned.

The rules for this year's tour contain many interesting additions, provisions which should have been adopted in previous years and which if properly carried out will do much towards making the tour what it is intended to be, a reliability test of the machines themselves. There are many wise provisions, none the least important of which is the appointment of official observers by each of the entrants. These observers will keep a record of all that goes on while the car is in the tour, and report their findings to the chairman at the end of each day's work. The use of observers will overcome the great objections that have arisen in the past and should prevent no end of disputing as to whether this, that or the other thing was or was not done.

Observer on Each Car.

Each car will carry an observer appointed by the maker of a rival car, and the rules require that these observers shall be expert or capable men. Another important change is the allowance of the time lost through tire trouble. There will be no committee to quarrel about matters this year, as the chairman of the touring board, Frank B. Hower, has been named by the A. A. A. as manager of the tour and he will have full charge. The rules permit of clubs naming several teams of three each and a team of three being composed of all one make. The system of scoring is similar to that of last year, but the rules exclude a tie and provide for the actual running of the Glidden prize by some one club. There are a number of other changes, each important, and so far as is known every objection that has been raised in former tours has been met by changes in the rules. The most important of the rules are:

A club team must be made up of not less than three cars, but a club may enter as many teams as it desires.

The [illegible] of each car will be recorded daily during the tour and at the finish of the contest each entrant, unless previously disqualified, will receive a certificate in accordance therewith.

An entrant of a touring car or a runabout not competing for either trophy who is a member of the American Automobile Association, but who may or may not be a member of a club affiliated therewith may compete [illegible] under the same rules and conditions as the other contestants and be awarded a like certificate. Cars so entered will be [illegible] the same as contestants for the Glidden and Hower trophies.

Each entrant may enter as many cars as he sees fit, but [illegible] as well as observers, [illegible] prior to July [illegible], 1908.

Each entrant or his official representative shall be held responsible for the acts of the passengers of his car.

The official representative of an entrant [illegible] rules and penalties [illegible] shall be considered as the entrant in fact.

Cars must at all times during the tour carry mufflers and [illegible] as per manufacturer's catalogue specifications.

Cars competing for the Glidden Trophy shall be equipped with regular seats and [illegible] for four persons or more, and shall carry not less than [illegible] average weight of 125 pounds [illegible] or the equivalent. [illegible] Cars equipped with [illegible] light bodies as built by some manufacturers [illegible] not be accepted in this class, but must enter as runabouts.

No replacements, tire changes, adjustments or repairs [illegible] With the exception of tires and [illegible] the start of the tour and if repairs [illegible] as above [illegible] will be charged against the [illegible] car provided the [illegible] or other work or adjustments [illegible] being made [illegible] other work is done on the car the time consumed will not be deducted, but will have to be made up by the car.

Only One Mechanician.

Each entrant must furnish an [illegible] previous to the start of all the extra parts carried in his car and the same shall be put in the [illegible].

A car shall carry but one mechanician and all repairs must be made by him, the operator or both, and no one else shall participate in any way in making any repairs or replacements.

Each car entered in competition for the Glidden or Hower trophies or for certificate must be delivered into the custody of the Chairman 24 hours prior to the start of the tour, viz., before 8 o'clock on the morning of July 8th, 1908, for official examination and to check the inventory of spare parts carried per paragraphs 6 and 7 above.

Where road conditions are so bad that a car can't [illegible] to move [illegible] after [illegible] effort [illegible] other external means may be used [illegible] but under no circumstances shall a car enter a night or any other control except under its own power. Where towing or assistance from any external source has been received by the car its observer must make a full and complete report giving time, place, [illegible] length of tow, and any other important details.

Class B—Cars valued at $2,500 and up to $3,500.
Class C—Cars valued at $1,500 and up to $2,500.
Class D—Cars valued under $1,500.

When the daily running time shall exceed 7½ hours, the running time of Class B will exceed that of Class A 15 minutes.
Class C will exceed that of Class A 30 minutes.
Class D will exceed that of Class A 45 minutes.

When the daily running time shall be less than 7½ hours, the running time of Class B will exceed that of Class A 10 minutes.
Class C will exceed that of Class A 20 minutes.
Class D will exceed that of Class A 30 minutes.

The Glidden Trophy shall be awarded to the club whose team finishes with the greatest number of points to its credit.

If two or more teams from more than one club finish with the same number of points to their credit, such teams shall compete in a special run governed by the same conditions and rules, and at the expense of the contestants so competing. [illegible] the club whose team [illegible] against it, shall be declared the winner of the trophy.

Penalties will be imposed for reaching controls ahead of, or behind running time. There will be allowed for variation of time [illegible]. Penalties will be effective for each minute or fraction thereof in excess of allowed two minutes.

Any car which may for any reason discontinue as a contestant shall be penalized [illegible] number of points with which it was credited at the start.

A team of three cars, one of which [illegible] varied at $10, will be penalized 1 1-3 points, [illegible] 1-3 of a point for each dollar.

A team of [illegible] cars, one of which [illegible] point for each [illegible].

A team [illegible] four cars [illegible] of which is three minutes late arriving at a control will be penalized [illegible] team of [illegible] each one of which is three minutes late arriving at a [illegible] in excess of the two minute allowance.

Class B—Cars valued under $1,500.

When the daily running time shall exceed 7½ hours the running time of Class B will exceed that of Class A 15 minutes.

When the daily running time shall be less than 7½ hours the running time of Class B will exceed that of Class A 10 minutes.

The Hower trophy will be awarded to the entrant of a [illegible] having the greatest number of points to the credit of his car at the end of the contest.

If two or more cars finish with the same number of points to their credit, such cars shall compete in a special run governed by the same conditions and rules, and at the expense of the contestants so competing. At the end of any day's run the car having the fewest points scored against it, shall be declared the winner of the trophy.

The [illegible] of scoring will be as follows:

[illegible]

Per [illegible] per minute or fraction thereof in excess of [illegible] 1 point.

[illegible] or fraction thereof of value of [illegible] as per manufacturer's price list 1 point.

BRISCOE REPORTS AUTO TRADE GOOD

Benjamin Briscoe returned Tuesday from a brief tour of inspection through the Middle West and reports optimism all along the line. "From Detroit west to the Mississippi the automobile buying season has opened [illegible] and is more brisk than [illegible] season, which if one is to take [illegible] view of [illegible], we won't be able to meet the demand [illegible] long ways," he said.

Mr. Briscoe spent only one day in New York and hurried on to Washington from where he will make another trip through the South, visiting Maxwell-Briscoe agents and branches.

MOTOR CYCLISTS IN LONG RUN

Big Entry List Is Promised Reliability Test On Patriots' Day.

The reliability run of the Massachusetts Motor Club on Patriots' Day promises to be an interesting event. The handsome souvenirs in the form of a watch chain or fob will not be restricted to members of the club, consequently a large entry list is assured. Motorcyclists from Dorchester, Lynn, Newton, Beverly, Lowell, Waltham, Everett, Malden and other suburban towns have promised to enter.

The Autocycle Club of Waltham will join in a body and the twenty riders of the Brockton Motorcycle Club will also be among the participants. At the last meeting of the club Mr. W. J. Drake was elected standard bearer and C. Walter Metz bugler. These officials will act under command of Captain Jack Fe[illegible], who will see that no excessive speed is indulged in. It has been made a rule that any rider passing the standard bearer will be instantly disqualified. This will discourage all those having a desire to test out the speed of their machines against other participants.

The run is to be distinctly a test of reliability. The riders will be checked at the start, Copley Square, 8.30 a. m., and must register at Worcester between 11.15 and 11.45, and at the finish point between 2 and 2.[illegible] [illegible].

The Massachusetts Motor Club has adopted a novel [illegible] way of distinguishing its members. The officers' uniform will [illegible] gray sweater [illegible] cloth [illegible] and cap. On [illegible] of the sweater will be embroidered the club emblem and official rank. WHITE WINS

New York Carnival Hill-Climb

A 30 horse-power White Steamer scored the fastest time in the great hill-climb at New York City, on April 9th, making the ascent of Fort George Hill from a standing start in 32 1-5 seconds, as compared with 36 seconds, scored by the fastest of the gasoline cars. All makes, domestic and foreign, claiming special hill-climbing ability, were represented in this contest.

The White has won so many important hill-climbs that its superiority in this style of competition is no longer questioned. The reasons for this superiority may be stated as follows:

1. The White engine, when called upon to do so, can probably develop more power than any other type.
2. It is certain that a larger percentage of the power of the engine is delivered at the rear wheels in the White than in any other machine. This was proven with mathematical exactness in the great English contest at South Harting, held for the purpose of determining this point.
3. The question of proper gearing for different gradients is not a vital one in the case of the White, as the car adapts itself perfectly to varying conditions. In other words, the unique flexibility of the White is of considerable advantage in hill-climbing contests, just as it is in touring or in city use.

We would like to give you a White demonstration

Don't Blame the Dealer

When, after you have bought a car from a dealer, you find he can't keep it in first-up condition all the time, don't blame him too hard.

He probably can't help it.

Maybe he can't get parts promptly from the maker. That isn't his fault. Maybe his mechanics are none too good—good ones are few and hard to get.

Maybe he sold the agency for the make you bought, and it's only natural for him to hope you'll dislike your car and buy one that he has to sell.

Yes, the dealer has his troubles.

Still, the man who pays $1000 or $4500 for a car is entitled to something more than excuses and disappointment, isn't he?

Somebody who took his money ought to be responsible for the car after the sale.

Who is?

If you buy a Winton car in Boston the Winton Company is responsible. And it doesn't offer excuses or dodge responsibility. It delivers the goods.

That's possible because the Winton Company has here its own branch house that represents Winton interests exclusively, sells Winton cars exclusively, employs Winton experts exclusively, keeps in stock Winton parts exclusively, speaks for the Winton company, enjoys all the facilities of the great Winton factory, and has nothing under the sun to do but to cooperate with every Winton owner (after the sale and as long thereafter as he remains a Winton owner) to keep him happy.

That's easy, too, because Winton cars are stable and simple, because our experts know Winton cars like they know the alphabet; and, by knowing, they are able to give the owner suggestions, co-operation, service that cuts down the after-cost and makes Winton ownership a joy.

DOTY CLIMBS ON TAFT BAND WAGON

Chairman of Republican State Committee Declares Preference for Secretary.

Chairman George H. Doty of the Republican State Committee has climbed aboard the Taft wagon. Chairman Doty announced the fact yesterday after Republican leaders for two months have been exerting themselves in a vain effort to have the chairman place himself.

"I am naturally much pleased by the harmonious action of the State Convention Friday," says Chairman Doty, "and by the good feeling which was [illegible] and so [illegible] expressed. It has been again demonstrated that the Republican party in Massachusetts can show [illegible] to serve the best interests of the State and Nation.

Now that the work of the Republican State Committee is completed as far as its participation in National matters is concerned, I feel at liberty to state my own personal feelings regarding presidential candidates, which have been from the beginning in favor of Honorable William H. Taft of Ohio who, I believe, will not only be nominated but elected as President of the United States in November.

Chairman Doty has a three-cornered fight on his hands in the fourth district. Ex-Mayor Charles Morse of Marlboro desires to go to Chicago as a delegate, and so does Louis A. Carlton of Gardner. The convention will be held in Ayer at 10 o'clock Saturday.

HOLD COTTON CROP FOR 15 CENT PRICE

Southern Planters Firmly Resist Vigorous Pounding by Exchange Bears.

Birmingham, Ala., April 11.—While the Cotton Exchange bears have been pounding the prices of future contracts in the hope of frightening the planter into selling the remnant of the 1907 crop, approximately 1,000,000 bales, the holders have been busily engaged in fortifying their position and financing their obligations, so that they need not sell a tenth of their holdings before September 1.

The Farmers' Union, through its State officials, has succeeded in financing all cotton in Missouri, Arkansas, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama and Georgia, on which loans were required. Texas and the Carolinas do not need banking and they are more determined than ever to hold for the price originally set as the real value of the staple to the grower, fifteen cents.

More food products, forage, meats, animals, poultry, etc., will be raised in the cotton belt this year than ever before, and those who grow part cotton will be in better position to hold for an advantageous market than for many seasons past.

CHURCH BARS NEW MALONEY WEDDING

Archbishop Forbids Priests to Officiate at Ceremony for Millionaire's Daughter.

Philadelphia, April 11.—Bound by legal fetters to a man with whom she eloped years ago when actuated by [illegible] romance, Helen Maloney [illegible] is to-day fighting desperately to be freed that she may marry the man of her [illegible] and with whom she [illegible] sensation not so very [illegible]

Tied, as it were, to [illegible] Osborne, whom she married [illegible] and to Samuel F. Clarkson, [illegible] English man with whom she [illegible] pretty Helen Maloney [illegible] upon being called [illegible] predicament ever [illegible]

The efforts of [illegible] from Osborne that [illegible] wedded to Clarkson [illegible] have the ceremony [illegible] Roman Catholic [illegible] seemingly blocked by [illegible] tice of the Peace [illegible] Mamaroneck [illegible] and Helen Maloney were married [illegible] and that he has a letter from Osborne which declares they were living together as husband and wife.

Appeals to the Vatican.

It is this fact that Helen Maloney, or Helen Osborne, has always denied, and the testimony of Justice Boyd has not been called for by Referee [illegible] who is conducting the legal [illegible] proceedings which Martin Maloney has brought in [illegible]

To free his daughter [illegible] whom she was [illegible] she may become the [illegible] man with whom the most [illegible] international elopement [illegible] recently, Martin Maloney [illegible] multi-millionaire of Philadelphia and a Marquis through the Pope at Rome, is bending every effort.

The divorce courts of the United States have been appealed to to annul her marriage to Broker Osborne and the Vatican is being besieged by Marquis Maloney with all the influence he can bring to bear on the Holy Father, to remove all disability to the remarrying of his favorite and willful daughter.

Church Stands as Barrier.

That a legal annulment will be secured through the courts there is little doubt for not for years [illegible] did Helen Maloney live with [illegible] and even then it was [illegible] they were married under wrong names or [illegible] of their full names.

But the [illegible] the Roman Catholic [illegible] Miss Maloney is such a distinguished [illegible] has given fortunes, [illegible] as a barrier to the marriage of the Standard Oil magnate's petted daughter and the young Englishman [illegible] her to elope with him when she knew that she had been married years before.

And so, the girl [illegible] finally returned home when her secret marriage to Broker Osborne had been revealed by him following [illegible] elopement urged upon her indulgent father to have her marriage annulled by law and then by the church and leave her free to wed the rich young Englishman, with whom, too late, she discovered she had given her heart.

Archbishop John Ryan of Philadelphia, a long-time friend of Martin Maloney, when confronted by the statement of Justice Boyd that he had in his possession a letter from Osborne showing indisputably that he had wedded Helen Maloney, declared that even if the marriage between the couple be annulled that he will not only not marry her to Samuel F. Clarkson or anyone else, but that he will not permit any priest in his archdiocese to do so.

WANT HOLIDAY TO HONOR COLUMBUS

Knights Making Preparations For Annual Convention of State Branch in May.

Preliminary arrangements are being made by the various councils of the Knights of Columbus for the annual convention of the State branch of the order, to be held in Lawrence Encampment Hall, Washington and Kneeland streets, Tuesday, May 12.

Since the last annual assembly the order has made rapid strides in Massachusetts. The total membership of the order now numbers 20,000. The finances of the several branches, together with real estate and other property, have also increased during the year.

The matter of making October 12, which is the anniversary of the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus, whom the order is named after, a national holiday, will come up for action under the head of new business.

On Monday evening, April 20, the annual banquet of the State Council will be held at the Hotel Brunswick. The list of speakers includes Archbishop William H. O'Connell, United States Senator Thomas H. Carter of Montana, Hon. Victor J. Dowling, Justice of the New York Supreme Court, and Supreme Knight Daniel J. Hearn.

BELLBOY SHOOTS AT JACK M'AULIFFE

Angry Negro Blazes Away at Ex-Pugilist and Is Soundly Chastised for Mistake.

Washington, April 11.—Jack McAuliffe, the ex-pugilist, dodged three bullets fired at him by an infuriated negro bellboy in the Hotel Normandie to-day, having a very narrow escape from death.

It appears that the bellboy had a grievance against some one in the hotel and hid behind the elevator, revolver in hand, waiting for his victim to come along.

McAuliffe left the barroom and proceeding around the elevator started to walk up stairs to the first floor. The light is not very good at this point and McAuliffe bumped into the negro who, with an oath, blazed away with his revolver.

McAuliffe was dazed for a moment, but recovered his wits as the negro, seeing his mistake, turned and raced up the stairs. The pugilist tore after him, and other guests, attracted by the noise of the shots, joined in the chase. The negro was caught and McAuliffe cut loose with his old collection of swings and uppercuts. The negro was all but senseless when the ex-pugilist was through with him, and was then permitted to go. McAuliffe would make no charge against him.

$100,000,000 NAVAL WASTE, SAYS LILLE

Congressman From Connecticut Makes Sensation Charges on Floor of House.

Washington, April 11.—With the opening up of the submarine scandal already to his credit, Representative George L. Lilley, Republican, Connecticut, to-day startled the House by revealing more family skeletons from the closets of the Naval Affairs Committee, of which he is a member.

He charged there had been lamentable misappropriation of $100,000,000 of public funds and gross extravagance in providing for navy yards and naval stations, and introduced a resolution that the President appoint a commission to report on the advisability of [illegible] the [illegible] stations at Kittery, Me., Port Royal and Charleston, S. C., Key West, Fla., New Orleans, La., and Mare Island, Cal.

He demanded that no senator should be appointed to the naval committee who had a yard or station in his district, and cast reflections on the Senators and Representatives who had been members of conferences between the two houses on naval appropriation bills in the past.

The Connecticut Congressman backed his demand that the yards be abandoned on the recent statement of Rear Admiral Stephen B. Luce, U. S. N.

Lilley gave the House some "concrete facts in reference to the six yards and stations, that no doubt of the need of business reorganization of the navy may linger in any mind."

"The Mare Island yard," said he, "cost the people $17,000,000, and built a magnificent stone drydock costing $1,175,000. I have a letter, however, [illegible] Lilley, "from the Secretary of the Navy, in which he states that the present stone drydock at Mare Island will not permit the docking of a battleship. Not only is this true, but a battleship cannot get to the yard." He told the House that [illegible] years ago Admiral M. T. Endicott, in his annual report, recommended the abandonment of the yard.

BROOKLYN BANK RESUMES.

TWO REMARKABLE CURES OF ECZEMA

Over Twenty-three Years Ago Baby had Severe Attack—Years Later Grandfather Suffered Torments with the Disease—Virulent Sores Developed from Knees to Toes.

BOTH OWE COMPLETE RECOVERY TO CUTICURA

"In 1884 my grandson, a babe, had an attack of eczema, and after trying the doctors to the extent of heavy bills and an increase of the disease and suffering, I recommended Cuticura and in a few weeks the child was well. He is to-day a strong man and absolutely free from the disease. A few years ago I contracted eczema, and became an intense sufferer. A whole winter passed without once having on shoes, my ankles and nearly from the knees to the toes being covered with virulent sores. I tried practitioners, specialists, dermatologists, etc., to no purpose. My daughter-in-law reminded me of having prescribed Cuticura for my grandson more than twenty years ago. I at once procured the Cuticura Remedies and found immediate improvement and final cure, till to-day, though well along in years, I am as though I had never had that disease. I am well known in the vicinity of Louisville and Cincinnati, and all this could be verified by witnesses. M. W. LaRue, 845 Seventh St., Louisville, Ky., April 23 and May 14, 1907."

The agonizing itching and burning of the skin, as in eczema; the frightful scaling, as in psoriasis; the loss of hair and crusting of scalp, as in scalled head; the facial disfigurement, as in acne—all demand remedies of extraordinary virtues to successfully cope with them. That Cuticura Soap, Ointment, and Pills are such stands proven by testimonials of remarkable cures when many remedies and even physicians have failed. One set is often sufficient to cure.

Cuticura Soap (25c.) to Cleanse the Skin, Cuticura Ointment (50c.) to Heal the Skin, and Cuticura Resolvent (50c.), (or in the form of Chocolate Coated Pills, 25c. per vial of 60) to Purify the Blood. Sold throughout the world. Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Sole Props., Boston, Mass. Mailed Free, Cuticura Book on Skin Diseases.

MYSTERY IN DEATH OF BOY; MAY HAVE BEEN SWEPT OFF BRIDGE BY GALE.

[illegible] Lad Discovered Near Railroad Track.

HAD MANY UGLY WOUNDS

Mother, Seeking Missing Son Finds Lifeless Form at Hospital Morgue.

"MY BABY," SHE WAILS

Police Are Seeking Further Light on Tragedy in the South End.

HOW nine-year-old Harry Lustsek, youngest of seven children of Otto Lustsek of No. 29 Village street, South End, who was found dead by the tracks of the Boston & Albany railroad under the Tremont street bridge last evening at 5:30 o'clock, came to his death is a mystery which the police of the La Grange street [illegible] are trying to solve.

As the boy's face was cut and his nose broken by a hard blow, and a deep cut in his skull was found by Medical Examiner McDonald at the autopsy, it is thought that Harry might have been blown from the Tremont street bridge during the high wind which raged for a time yesterday evening.

At 5:30 [illegible] John Leonard found the lifeless [illegible] the Boston & Albany tracks [illegible] mont street [illegible] to the City Hospital morgue.

Identifies Her Dead Boy.

About 8:30 in the evening, when Mrs. Lustsek, who, with her daughter, Elizabeth, called at the police station to inquire if a lost boy had been found, she was told that the body of a boy had been taken from the railroad tracks to the City Hospital morgue.

Thither the anxious mother and terror-stricken daughter quickly went and one glance at the still [illegible] form was all that [illegible] needed [illegible].

"I sent Harry [illegible] to buy a cake at Best's bakery," [illegible] Mrs. Lustsek [illegible] to a Sunday American reporter. "When he did not return I began to grow anxious. We failed to find anyone who had seen Harry and we went to the La Grange street police station. There we learned too much [illegible] told us where we could find the body of a boy like my description. We went to the morgue and there poor Harry was. It was awful. He was my baby. I can't imagine how he came to be thrown off that bridge. I can't think that anyone would have done it and I can hardly think that the wind did, although it was blowing very hard in the evening."

Blown From Bridge

The police of the La Grange street station do not suspect any foul play. They do not think from the appearance of the boy's body that he was run over by a train, for his body was not mangled nor were his clothes disarranged.

The most likely theory, as the police say, is that the lad's cap was blown away in the wind and that in trying to [illegible] he was blown from the bridge to the tracks and that the fall killed him when he struck on his head.

New Thought Cult to Be Launched by Earle and Affinity

"Biggest Sensation Yet to Come," Declares Artist Again in This Country.

New York, April 11.—Ferdinand P. Earle, in an interview at his home in New Monroe to-night, was enthusiastic on account of what he terms his triumph over the conventions of society. Already he is at work on plans by which he intends to develop a panacea for all who are unhappily married.

When he is heard from again Earle says the public will receive a surprise even greater than that which he supplied when he shipped his wife and baby boy back to France last September that he might marry his affinity. The artist and his second wife have settled down to country life at [illegible] Earle's country estate. They announced that this would be the base from which they would conduct their future work, which, it is hinted, will be along lines differing but little from the ideas advanced by the Shakers and Lebonites.

None of the neighbors has called upon the affinity bride as yet and none has indicated an intention to do so.

"We knew that it was a matter of time until the public would see us as we see others," said Earle. "The noise is all over now and we intend to remain here and do nothing but seek happiness for several months. Then we have plans for a line of work in new thought that will probably furnish another surprise."

[illegible] jumped from their seats and [illegible] other [illegible] the floor of the [illegible] and women who were in the audience added to the excitement by persistent screaching.

The trouble started over a decision by Referee Smith which was [illegible] Finnerty, the [illegible] Gloucester [illegible] The crowd then jumped to the floor and seperated the belligerents. The [illegible] Finnerty [illegible] turn to go to the floor. Then the crowd jumped into the arena and in less than a minute there was a riot in progress, the Wakefield adherents fighting the visitors [illegible] to resume the game, but the Gloucester five left the floor. The manager of the Gloucester team then announced that his [illegible] first and being tied for the second. Gloucester was ahead 11 to 8 in the first half, but at the time the fight started, Wakefield was in the lead.

Villagers Remain on Guard All Night Prepared for Fresh Outbreak.

SEABROOK, N. H., April 11.—Four hundred sturdy villagers, armed with buckets and brooms, fought desperately from two o'clock this afternoon until ten to-night to save the town of Seabrook from being wiped out by a fire which, fanned by a heavy wind, raged through the woods all afternoon and evening with a fury, at times reaching dangerous proximity to sixty dwelling houses directly in the course of its path.

Late to-night the wind shifted to the northwest and soon after the fire was under control. The town is safe, but only after one of the hardest battles the villagers have ever waged. Many families [illegible] fresh outbreak.

Starts on Amesbury Line

The fire started close to the Amesbury [illegible] from a spark from a passing locomotive on the Boston & Maine Railroad [illegible] blaze it developed quickly into a raging fire, heading straight toward Seabrook.

When the alarm was sounded the villagers dropped work and formed themselves into a bucket brigade. [illegible] squads of ten [illegible] flames. Water was carried in buckets from neighboring wells and cisterns. With the supply of buckets exhausted, brooms and shovels were picked as weapons.

Hundreds of tall trees in the dense section of the woods were cut down to check the flames, but fanned by the wind, they leaped the chasms and continued to spread.

Women Pack Up Goods.

While the fire [illegible] many women [illegible] household goods and [illegible] preparations to remove to [illegible] the town would [illegible].

It was about 9 o'clock when the wind shifted [illegible] then the flames, beaten back toward the burned patches of wood, gradually died out, and an hour later the danger was past. It was nearly midnight when a majority of the villagers went to bed. Many of them stayed on guard until morning.

ELECTRIC SHOCK KILLS WORKMAN

While working over an electric light at Charles street and Highland avenue, Malden, late yesterday afternoon Cornelius Carey, an employe of the Malden Electric company, suffered a shock which resulted in his death.

Carey had been at work on the incandescent lamp for half an hour when he suddenly fell to the ground. He was carried to a nearby lawn and medical aid summoned [illegible] every effort to revive him, to no avail.

Carey had been a resident in Malden for a score of years. He had been in the employ of the electric company [illegible] He is survived by a widow and two small children, living at No. 48 Middlesex street, Malden.

'Professors Must Abandon All Idea of Wealth,' Says Eliot

Chicago, April 11.—President Charles W. Eliot of Harvard delivered the third [illegible] of six lectures in [illegible] on the Northwestern University campus to-day. His subject was "The University Faculty."

In appointing men to a real professorship it is better to name married men [illegible] said President Eliot.

"It is much safer to give life positions to married men than to single men, who may shortly be married with uncertain results. Young instructors or tutors should not marry, because the remuneration is not sufficient to support a man and wife. But when a man becomes an assistant professor the remuneration is then about sufficient to support man and wife and two or three children.

"The position of professor of a university never attracts men from a financial standpoint," he said. "Men wishing to become university professors should first abandon all expectations of acquiring wealth and luxury. Of outside position the remuneration is much higher. The salaries of university professors should be increased.

"The age of from twenty-five to forty [illegible] years is the better [illegible] of life for men to become university professors," President Eliot added. "There have been some cases where men over forty-six years of age were successful as professors, but it is dangerous for a university to appoint a man who is over forty-five years old."

BOY DRIVER BADLY HURT.

While driving an express wagon in Dorchester yesterday afternoon, John Dacey, fifteen years old, living at No. 41 Chipman street, Dorchester, was thrown from his seat underneath the wheels. His right arm was broken and he received severe injuries to both legs as well as numerous bruises and contusions.

ASK POLICE PROTECTION FOR RIVERBANK COURT

Rich Residents of Charles River Apartment House Alarmed by Big Strange Men—Appeal to Officers.

Fashionable Riverbank court in Cambridge complains that it doesn't get enough protection from the police. Its residents [illegible] are strange men about the [illegible] and women have been pursued [illegible] evenings during the past week by a "Jack the Peeper."

In [illegible] to the complaint which has been made to him by letter, Chief of Police Puffer announced last night that there would be rigid investigation into the report that one or more police officers who [illegible] supposed to cover that part of the city [illegible] one car [illegible] the station and depart again without looking over the territory.

The officer on the route is supposed to [illegible] Charles River road during [illegible] months when there is [illegible] save by the people who live in the vicinity. [illegible] there is quite a sweep of wind across the road and it is not a pleasant [illegible]

During the warm months, when the cool air seekers are out in force, the force of police is increased by a bicycle officer, who rides through the road several times during the night.

WHY PA ROOSEVELT SCOLDED QUENTIN

He Didn't Like His Make-Up as Clown; It Also Made Him Late at School.

Washington, April 11.—The departure of Quentin Roosevelt on his Southern trip has solved a mystery at the Force School. Throughout the Winter one of the boys in a class of children about Quentin's age has been lavishing hot house blossoms on his teacher. Repeated inquiries brought out only the fact that the flowers were given to the youthful donor. Quentin left the city and simultaneously the daily floral gift failed to make its appearance. Now it transpires that the flowers came from the White House conservatory.

Quentin and the boy had made a bargain. The President's son was to furnish a stipulated number of blossoms each day in return for a lot of "milk tops," which is schoolboy vernacular for the discs of pasteboard the milk dealers use in the tops of milk bottles.

Quentin's friendship with the head gardener at the White House and made the acquiring of a small bouquet each day no difficult matter, so the bargain was struck and everybody was happy.

Just before leaving Washington Quentin developed [illegible] unusual condition of [illegible] Furthermore, he was several times in succession late for school.

"Quentin," inquired his teacher, "what has gone wrong? You were late yesterday and the day before, and you are behind time again today."

As the lad raised his head his teacher discovered vivid streaks of red about his brow and on his cheeks.

"Why, Quentin, what has marked your face up in that fashion?" she inquired.

"That what is the matter," piped up Quentin. "I used some red ink to make up for a clown and the ink won't wash off. This morning father noticed it and gave me an awful going over. He says I'm a sight, and I guess he's about right," concluded Quentin.

$1,500 ROBBERY IN ROXBURY HOME

Police Give Out News of Burglary Two Days After Its Perpetration

The Boston police after keeping silent two days, last night gave out the news of a $1,500 robbery Thursday night at the home of Daniel Winyc[illegible] at No. 23 Wales street, Roxbury. Silver ware and articles of jewelry were stolen.

Sixteen year old Rae W[illegible], returning home from Jordan Hall, where she essayed the leading role in an entertainment for the benefit of the Little Helpers, saw a light burning in the parlor, and knowing her parents had left the house in darkness when they went away, she ran back and notified her father, who was also returning from the entertainment.

The police say they believe the robbery was committed by persons well acquainted with the interior of the house and probably with the family. They watched for a good opportunity to operate. The house is situated in the wealthy Elm Hill section and many persons passed back and forth in the street from the time the W[illegible] went away in the evening until they returned, yet no one saw anything suspicious about the place.

The burglars were bold. Entering they chloroformed the little girl's pet the dog Fido, to prevent the animal from barking and perhaps attracting the attention of neighbors or passers-by. Then they turned on the light and worked at ease.

WOMAN SEEKS $40,000 DAMAGES FROM DOCTORS

Concord, N. H., April 11.—Suit for $40,000 has been brought by Miss Laura Dunn of Manchester, N. H., against Dr. Clarence M. Dodge and Dr. Michael E. Jean, both of whom are prominent in the same city.

Found Near Death in Providence Street Early This Morning.

NO HOPE FOR RECOVERY

NO CLEW TO IDENTITY

Victim Insensible, Appears to Be Prosperous Working Man.

PROVIDENCE, April 12.—The almost lifeless body of an unknown man, with face battered beyond recognition and a stone weighing fifty pounds resting upon his crushed head, was found lying on the pavement in Canal street near Mill street, about 1 o'clock this morning.

The body was discovered by Charles Swan, Albert Sidney and Louis Meyerson, who notified the police.

The man was taken to the Rhode Island hospital where it is said that he cannot live. His skull is fractured and his face and the upper part of his body are a mass of horrible bruises.

No Clew to Identity.

His pockets contained sixteen cents, but nothing to give the faintest clew to his identity. He is a middle aged man and was dressed like a [illegible].

The police have no clew to the perpetrator of this grewsome crime, if such it proves to be. Patrolman Durey of precinct 2, on whose beat the body was found, says he passed the spot at 12 to this morning and it was not there then.

The huge rock which crushed the man's head is thought to have come from the wall of an old canal only a few blocks away.

"In all my experience I have never met with a stranger crime than this," said Chief Horton. "There is practically no doubt that it was an attempt at murder, as there is no possible way the rock could have fallen on the victim's head. The mystery is made all the deeper from the fact that the stone used in the assault weighs fifty pounds, is fully two feet in length and must have been carried several blocks to where the body was found."

Canal street is about one mile from the centre of the city. It is not a much frequented street after midnight, but there must have been a number of people who passed through it between the time Patrolman Durey made his last round and the time the body was found.

Mrs. Alice Webb-Duke Measured by Police Like Common Felon

Former Wife of Tobacco King Faints in Jail—Held on Charge of Passing Worthless Checks.

Chicago, April 11.—Alice Webb Duke, former wife of the millionaire tobacco king, held to the grand jury to-day by Municipal Court Judge Beitler, was taken to the rogues' gallery and measured according to the Bertillon system of identification for criminals. Her photographs were taken and imprints of her thumbs were made. Then she was taken to the county jail to await trial for passing worthless checks. During the rogues' gallery ordeal, Mrs. Duke fainted. She appeared to be overcome by the thought that she was being photographed like a common thief. Her rogues' gallery number is 4120. She was registered as "Alice Webb, alias Alice Duke."

Mrs. Duke is charged with passing a worthless check for $50 in the Great Northern Hotel. Through her lawyer Mrs. Duke made desperate efforts to prevent a hearing of the charge against her by a jury in the criminal court building. The prosecution was brought by Frank Repetto, house detective for the Congress Hotel Company, which operates the Great Northern Hotel. During the hearing it was charged that other checks which had been passed by Mrs. Duke had been returned to her because there were no funds to meet them.

BAR ASSOCIATION URGES INTEGRITY

About 150 members of the Boston Bar Association met yesterday afternoon in the law library in the [illegible] building and a resolution was adopted which, while it mentioned no names, is understood to have grown out of the recent financial tangles of John O. Shaw, who is now at a sanitarium.

The resolution calls the attention of the members of the legal profession to the necessity for uprightness and integrity in the following of the profession, especially when acting in positions of trust.

The following attorneys were elected members of the association: Danforth W. Comens, Channing H. Cox, Jacob Bernard Ferber, Matthew Hale, Ernest H. Johnson, Van Cortland Lawrence, Wendell Phillips Murray and Rufus B. Sprague.

J. B. Ferber is a candidate for third assistant to the United States District Attorney.

GIRL GETS DEATH THREAT IN LETTER

$300 DEMANDED OF HER

Fearful that her life is in jeopardy, Miss Jennie Cummings, twenty-two years of age, a young photographer of No. 103 Moody street, Waltham, who received a "Black Hand" letter demanding $300, is on the verge of a nervous breakdown as the [illegible] made in the letter against her life.

The police of Waltham are diligently seeking the author of the missile. Chief McKenna, who now has possession of the le[illegible] are baffled so far in their search. There is absolutely no clue upon which to work to reveal the author's identity.

Is Greatly Worried.

Miss Cummings, who is an attractive girl with a wealth of [illegible] hair, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Cummings of No. 18 Water street. Her story, as t[illegible] Boston Sunday reporter, is as follows:

"I [illegible] been nearly worried to death since I received that awful letter. I don't know what [illegible] anybody [illegible] know of. Neither my parents [illegible] brothers have a per[illegible] harm so far as [illegible] figure [illegible] every [illegible] to harm me [illegible] in vain.

[illegible] nerves are [illegible] I have been [illegible] afraid [illegible] after dark.

[illegible] letter came into my studio at [illegible] then [illegible] upon [illegible] If somebody did it for a joke, it was a cruel act, but I hardly think that was what it was meant for.

Contains Death Threat

"I haven't seen any suspicious person prowling about my home or my studio, though my parents and myself have been on the lookout. If anybody tried to do me violence, they will find it hard to get at me."

The letter which Miss Cummings received reads as follows:

"Miss Cummings—you have plenty and must give $300 or you will be killed. Have it always with you and when you are ask for it you hand it out quick or you will be killed on the spot. You try any trick or tell the polis you will be killed.

"The Black Hand."

The police are of the opinion that the letter was written by some illiterate foreigner. It was scrawled in very poor hand writing, on a half sheet of w[illegible] paper. It was mailed in Waltham [illegible] day night.

Miss Cummings is one of [illegible] sisters and brothers. The family moved to W[illegible] them two years ago from St. Johns, N. B., and are well known. Miss Cummings is prominent in Waltham's younger social set.

SOUND 3 ALARMS FOR $500 BLAZE

Chelsea Residents Receive a Scare When Fire Starts in Small Stable.

Chelsea received a scare last evening when three alarms were sounded for a fire, calling the apparatus to a small blaze which had started in a shed and stable in the rear of No. 104 Second street.

The stable was owned by Patrick O'Connor, who has a wheelwright establishment close by, and was used by him for the storage of teams and carriages. When the fire started willing hands hauled the vehicles out of danger. The loss is estimated at $500.

YOUNG ERNE BESTS MURPHY

Philadelphia, Pa., April 11.—Young Erne of Philadelphia tonight outfought Tommy Murphy in their six-round bout. At the finish Murphy was bleeding from a cut under one of the eyes, while Erne was unmarked.

In only one round, the fifth, did Murphy have a [illegible]. In this round he held his own with the Quaker City lad. In the other rounds, however, Erne showed to advantage and outclassed the Harlemite.

WARD 20 TIP CARTS HAVE CLEAR FIELD

Democratic residents of Ward 20, who have been accustomed to spirited contests in ward politics, will find harmony at the coming caucuses for the election of delegates to the State and Tenth Congressional District Convention to nominate delegates to the National Democratic Convention [illegible].

[illegible] leader of the ward [illegible] of the ward committee, has not entered any delegations for the coming caucus, and William J. Power and his cohorts, known as the Tip Cart Democracy of the ward, will have a clear field for their tickets.

The refusal of Congressman O'Connell to take part in the contest is taken to mean that he is reserving his strength for his fight to secure re-election to Congress.

JOHNSON FORCES OHIO TO BRYAN

Cleveland, O., April 11.—Although he has himself been frequently and persistently mentioned as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for President, Mayor Tom L. Johnson to-day had the Cuyahoga County Democratic convention indorse the candidacy of William J. Bryan. The meeting was held to elect delegates to the State convention and was dominated completely by Johnson. The resolution favoring Bryan was put through at the Mayor's own order.

Young Woman Fears Her Life Is in Danger From 'Black Hand'

MISS JENNIE CUMMINGS

CRANE OFF FOR WEST TO LINE UP AGAINST TAFT

Both He and Lodge Satisfied by Harmonic Ending of Party Chaos in Bay State.

Republicans, guessing over who really won in Friday's state convention—Senator Crane with his contention of last summer upheld, that delegates should be sent from Massachusetts "unhampered by pledge or instruction," or Senator Lodge who smiles in a quiet smile as he surveys an assured majority for Taft among the delegates from Massachusetts—are speculating over the move that the senators will next make.

Both United States senators left Massachusetts satisfied: Crane, that the convention did not pass resolutions pledging its delegates to Taft, and Lodge that out of chaotic and perplexed condition, "harmony" in the end came and that the convention [illegible] resolution admitted that the Taft supporters were in the majority.

Westward Ho! for Crane.

Three hours after the close of the convention Senator Crane was speeding on a train to the West, and Senator Lodge was bound for Washington.

That Senator Crane has gone to consult with western leaders of the Republican party opposed to Taft and that the junior senator's mission, fortified by the refusal of the Massachusetts convention to pronounce squarely for Taft, is to help out in the broad national field, to defeat the secretary of war is the general belief.

The Crane headquarters have been closed. "Our fight against a resolution of preference has been won," says Gen. Edgar R. Champlin. But beyond that Gen. Champlin says nothing. He is as silent [illegible].

The silence of Murray Crane troubles the Taft supporters in Massachusetts. They recall the interview of last July between the two United States senators when the declaration of Senator Lodge that delegates from Massachusetts should be sent "pledged and instructed for Taft" was met with the defi of Senator Crane that if he could prevent it, delegates would be sent "unhampered and unpledged," that while "the big stick might be wielded at Washington, it had no terrors for him."

They recall the vigorous and repeated declarations of Congressman Augustus P. Gardner—Senator Lodge's son-in-law—that if he lived until convention day he would offer a Taft resolution himself if no one else did; but though alive and in good health the Sixth district Congressman sat silent on the convention platform and failed to "make good."

Followers of Senator Crane, claiming a complete victory for their principles, declare that a Taft resolution would have been defeated in the convention. They point to the general applause which greeted the announcement in the resolutions that it would be unwise to present a resolution of preference, and to the feeble applause that met the mention of Taft.

Son-in-Law Here, Supreme.

So far delegates to Chicago have been elected in only two congressional districts, the Ninth and Eleventh, both Boston districts. Of the four delegates three are openly for Taft while one is for Governor Hughes. In both districts, however, mild Taft preferential resolutions have been passed, resolutions not binding the delegates to Taft, but expressing a preference for the secretary of war as the presidential nominee.

Three district conventions are to be held on Tuesday: the Third district convention in Worcester at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, the Fifth district in Lawrence at 10 o'clock and the Eleventh district, the last of the Boston districts, in Wesleyan hall at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Thursday the convention of the Sixth district will be held in Salem at 10 o'clock. Congressman Gardner is expected to present his belated Taft resolutions at the Salem convention. His ticket of Charles M. H. Hoyt of Haverhill, and Albert Vittum of Beverly for delegates has the support of 111 delegates out of a total of 1[illegible]. In his own congressional district the Sixth district congressman is supreme.

HEBREWS OBSERVE FEAST OF PASSOVER

At sundown Wednesday millions of Jews in every country and every clime will begin the celebration of the joyous eight days' festival of "Pesach"—called in English Passover.

In Greater Boston the observance of the festival, which is the longest in duration of any in the Jewish calendar, will be carried out even more elaborate [illegible] previous years, for special cantors and choirs have been engaged in the various synagogues.

One of the traditional features of the holidays is the use of the "matzos" or unleavened bread, which is used in place of the regular wheat bread for the entire eight days. "Matzos" are made in the form of large crackers, either square or round, and are made from a special meal, without salt.

Services will be held [illegible] thousands of Jews [illegible]

SLAYS MAN WHO KILLED HIS DOG

Mobile, Ala., April 11.—"Yes, I killed Harris; he killed my dog." Such was the admission of Isham B. Elrod, twenty years old and a private in the One Hundred and Seventieth Company, Coast Artillery, stationed at Fort Morgan, who was arrested there on a charge of murder, brought to Mobile and taken to the scene of the alleged murder.

Enraged over the killing of his dog, young Elrod rushed from home with a shot gun and fired the contents into the body of the old man, killing him.

NAMES COUNCILMAN IN BRIBERY SCANDAL

Haverhill, April 11.—Councilman J. William Homans, youngest member of the City Council, who was arrested on the day he was inaugurated, charged with accepting a bribe for his vote in the city solicitorship contest and acquitted, was again accused this afternoon by Henry L. Taylor, head of the H. L. Taylor Coal Company, [illegible] to the municipal [illegible] that Homans had asked him for a present because he had awarded Taylor one of the street sprinkling jobs.

Councilman William H. Cook was hurriedly sent for when the startling disclosures were made and he stated before the commission that Homans had made a statement to him that if he would allow Homans to allot the sprinkling cart controlled by Cook, there would be a present in it for him.

The affair has created the greatest kind of a sensation in the city to-night and District Attorney Peters will receive the evidence [illegible] case in the form of affidavits Monday morning.

STEAL $50,000 WORTH OF JEWELS

San Francisco, April 11.—Fifty thousand dollars' worth of jewelry and diamonds was stolen from the jewelry store of T. Lundy on Market street to-day.

There is no clew to the identity of the robbers.

DEBATING SOCIETY LEADS TO ROMANCE

The wedding of Miss Helen A. Towne of Winchester to Herbert W. Briggs of New York and Boston in New York city yesterday may be taken as one delightful argument in favor of debating societies, for it is said that the abilities of Mr. Briggs as a disputant in his college days at Dartmouth first attracted the notice of Miss Towne.

The two met when he was a Dartmouth undergraduate and she was a student at the Emerson College of Oratory in this city. Miss Towne was naturally interested in oratory and Mr. Briggs had a gift that way. His powers of argument and persuasion evidently lost none of their force in matters of sentiment, judging from yesterday's sequel to [illegible] acquaintance.

Miss Towne is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Towne of No. [illegible] avenue, Winchester.

Mr. Briggs is the son of the Rev. Charles Augustus Towne, whose change from the Congregational to the Episcopal faith several years ago was the ecclesiastical sensation of the day.

The younger Mr. Briggs is now connected with the Boston banking firm of E. H. Rollins & Sons and is now located in New York.

The wedding yesterday took place in the chantry of Grace Church, New York, the Rev. Mr. Briggs officiating. Miss Towne was attended by her sister, Miss Lillian Towne, and Mr. Briggs' classmate, Percy O. Dorr of this city, was best man.

TYPHOID EPIDEMIC WANES, SAYS BOARD

Number of New Cases on the Decrease, Declare Health Officials.

A decrease in the number of cases of typhoid fever reported yesterday as compared with the preceding days lead the health authorities to believe that the present epidemic, which seems to be practically confined to the Jamaica Plain district, is on the wane.

Since April 1 when the first outbreak occured there have been 253 cases reported, averaging nearly 25 cases per each day. In all there are 289 cases in the city. About seventy-five percent of these cases are from Jamaica Plain.

Every effort is being put forth by Dr. Shea, chief medical officer of the health board, and his assistants to put a stop to the epidemic.

It has not been positively decided as yet whether or not the several farms in Worcester county from which the milk supply is received are responsible for the present situation. The supply from these suspected dairies has been shut off, and not until the officials are convinced that the milk is perfectly wholesome and does not contain typhoid baccilli, will they permit it to be shipped.

An autopsy on the body of John J. Falton, the Jamaica Plain milkman, who died at his home on Lamartine street Friday morning, and who delivered milk in the infected neighborhood, disclosed the fact that he had been suffering with typhoid for nearly four weeks, or two weeks before he gave up his work of testing and delivering milk.

The latest victim to the disease is Sophia S. Fugstrom, of Plainfield street. Rose street seems to be the section of the Jamaica Plain which has suffered the most, thirty-five cases having been reported from this particular street.

Notwithstanding that the health authorities believe that the crisis in the situation is nearly over the general opinion among medical men is that it will be fully a month before the spead of the disease will be absolutely checked.

Courtship Begun in Drawing School Ends in Wedding To-Day

Miss Fehon, 31, Will Marry W. D. Teague, 24; Both Are Artists.

As a sequence of a courtship which started in New York while they were attending drawing school, Miss Cecilia Fehon, thirty-one years old, of Huntington avenue, Boston, will to-day wed W. D. Teague, twenty-four years old, No. 260 West 113th street, New York. Yesterday the couple called at City Hall and secured a marriage license.

Miss Fehon is an artist. She has offices and studio at No. 170A Tremont stret. Most of her work is drawing advertisements. Mr. Teague is also an artist and does the same kind of work for New York houses.

To Ride Log Over Death Gap Torrent to Make Boast Good

Daring Maine Lumberman Amazes Associates by Plans for Thrilling Plunge.

Portland, Me., April 11.—That he will ride on a log through Spencer Gap, where the water swirls and runs at floodgate speed and through which no man, so far known, [illegible] passed and lived, is the boast of [illegible] Rowell, of Pleasant Ridge. Rowell is a lumberman of wide experience and he has driven logs through scores of Maine streams, and knows the danger of his proposed trip. His announcement which he has made in the form of a wager, has been received by his fellow woodsmen with amazement.

When the spring rise of water is on, Spencer Gap is a howling torrent plunging through two miles of jagged bowlders. The foam is so deep above the top of the [illegible] that 100 logs have been sent through the gap and not one of them been seen until they reached the whirlpool at the foot of the lower level.

HILLSIDE CLUB TO STUDY OLD POETS

The members of the Hillside Club at their next regular meeting, which is to be held next Thursday evening, April 16, at the home of William Franklin Hall, No. 103 Thurston street, Somerville, will be entertained by readings taken from "The Classical Period of English Verse." Rev. Harley D. Maxwell will read from "Alexander Pope" and Miss Clara A. Johnson from "Oliver Goldsmith." Miss Florence Ralph will furnish a number of vocal selections.

FOOD, CLOTHING, COAL, RENT, ALL SHOW COST INCREASE

Everything Is "Going Up" in Price, Besides Cut Glass.

Necessaries of life—from clothespins and pepper up to overcoats and roast beef—are costing so much more to-day, without corresponding increase in family income, that the price of living is geting nearly beyond the earning capacity of the workingman at present.

The colloquial term "going up" applies with anything but humorous meaning to practically everything people eat, drink and wear. About the only article that shows any marked decrease in price of late is cut glass, a concession that affords but slim consolation to the family in blown-glass circumstances.

Prices in Ascendance.

For instance: Sugar retails at six cents a pound. Coffee bids about the same. Kerosene is a bit cheaper, but 90 per cent. of the families use gas. Chinaware is up 25 per cent., kitchen goods cost 10 per cent. more, furniture 20 per cent., carpets 25 per cent.

Clothing is decidedly higher. It is estimated that an outfit of clothes, including overcoat, suit, underwear, hat, shoes and so on, which would cost a man $54 in 1904, could not be bought on Washington street to-day for less than $70.

It is not many years since a laborer could get pretty fair board and room for $4 a week. The same accomodations to-day call for $5 or $6 every Saturday night.

The popular meal ticket has gone upwards with the rest. The standard 21-meal ticket now costs from $4.50 upwards to-day, whereas it could be purchased for $3.25 or $3.50 ten years ago.

The Rise of Price in Simple Necessities

	At present.	Five yrs. ago.
Sideboard.....	$47.00	$37.00
Suit ..	18.00	15.00
Shoes..........	3.50	3.00
Boiled dinner..	.30	.25
Roast pork....	.30	.25
Broiled chicken	.50	.40
Rib roast, lb.	.20 to .25	.14
Sirloin, lb.....	.23	.20
Leg of lamb, lb.	.22	.15

Any man who lunches at the Boston restaurants can tell you how orders have grown beautifully smaller and the price list higher during the past five years. Five-cent cuts of pie are ten cents, and the patron is lucky if the cut is a quarter of a pie and not a sixth. And no cheese half the time, either.

The "special dinners" and luncheons are higher in price and more often scantier in quantity than formerly. Instead of "Try our special lunch" it is our "35-cent special, which the same restaurant and cafe offers.

And the ordinary quick lunch feed could be bought for fifteen or twenty cents five years ago now costs a quarter or more.

Market prices range high, except eggs which seem to hold to reasonable terms.

Rent is higher and seems to be going up instead of down. As for that other great factor in the family accounts—the less said about coal pricee the better, for it costs from $12 to $15 more a year to heat a house or a flat than it used to.

FLORETTA WHALEY HAPPY DESPITE WIFE'S REVENGE

San Francisco, April 11.—Woman arrayed against woman and with a man in the background as a chief feature in the case—such is the status to-day of that strange drama in real life which the Rev. Jere Knode Cooke, former pastor of the fashionable St. George's Church at Hempstead, L. I., now a day laborer in this city, his deserted wife and his former parishioner, Floretta Whaley, are essaying leading roles.

Floretta Whaley wants Mrs. Cooke to secure a divorce, that she may marry Cooke herself and give a name to their four-months-old boy. Mrs. Cooke refuses, and has taken a fearful revenge by threatening that if Cooke starts divorce proceedings she will cause his arrest and have him brought back East upon a charge of desertion. Cooke himself, while the controversy is on, stands by helplessly, earnestly hoping for the best.

The wife's ultimatum has just been served on Miss Whaley and the deposed clergyman. The two are still here, Cooke earning his living and supporting his "affinity" and child by the sweat of his brow and Miss Whaley fighting poverty and disgrace in a humble tenement house.

It would be impossible to conceive a more dramatic situation in real life. Mrs. Cooke holds the situation in the hollow of her hand, and by following the simple policy of inaction outlined by her lawyer, she is able to avenge her wrong more poignantly than any court of justice. Her vengeance strikes at the heart. It leaves an everlasting sting.

Mrs. Cooke is childless. When she saw the picture of the Whaley girl and the latter's baby she studied it intently, without sign of distress. Then she passed it back to her mother. "It's a good picture of her," she said. And that was all.

"They want to know," said Mrs. Cooke's mother, "after having seen the picture whether you will secure a divorce or consent to a divorce being obtained that the child—may—have—a—name."

"My plans," replied the deserted woman, her face showing not a trace of emotion, "are as my lawyer says. I am glad, however, that she (Miss Whaley) is happy. And I am pleased to know that none of the trio—Cooke, Floretta Whaley or the child—is in distress. But certainly I cannot condone their sin against God and against society by a single thought or deed."

What would a woman do in the circumstances? had been the question. Would she be moved by the sight of the laughing, innocent babe not to forgive the man and woman who had been guilty of the wrong but to save from irreparable injury the child that was guiltless? Would she blot out the face of the woman in the picture—the mother—and see only the innocent features of the child?

By simply doing nothing the wife could make it possible for the child, doomed otherwise to be a nameless thing, to be given the name of the husband now lost to her forever.

"I do not look worn and worried, do I?" Floretta Whaley asked, when interviewed at her home to-day. "When I came away I did not know anything. I did not even know how to use hot water in the dish pan and it made me tired almost to death to wash dishes. But now I'm a pretty good housekeeper. And I take care of baby without any trouble.

"And isn't he a fine boy?" the mother asked, proudly holding the little fellow up in her arms.

"He does not look as though he was sickly and badly nourished, does he? We are all three just as well as we can be and happy. I do wish, though," said she a little wistfully, "that Jere could get something to do more in keeping with his talents than manual labor. He is better than that and it does seem a little hard that he should have to keep on with that kind of work, but," with an emphatic nod of her head, "he does it well."

METHODISTS SPLIT ON DANCING CLOUSE

Wage Bitter Contest Over Plan to Remove Church Ban on Frivolity.

EXPECT REPORT MONDAY

Worcester, April 11.—A bitter contest is expected by Methodists when the question of retaining or striking out paragraph 248, which threatens the discipline of the church upon those who "dance, play at games of chance, attend theatres, horse racing, dancing parties or patronize dancing schools" comes up for discussion at the sixth session of the New England Methodist Episcopal conference, Monday. At 10.30 in the morning the committee appointed at the opening session last Wednesday to memorialize a report on the clause, to be sent to the general conference at Baltimore the first week in May, will hand in its report.

It was stated to-day upon good authority that the committee's report will favor the striking out of the clause because the members believe that the individual should act as his conscience dictates.

During the month several Methodist bodies, among them the New York conference, have declared in favor of repealing the paragraph, and those behind the movement at the New England conference feel their position strengthened for this reason.

Think Individual Should Choose.

Advocatesm of the movement do not want to have Methodists told what they may or may not do. It is their contention that it is a narrow policy to give Methodists a list of prescribed rules for every [illegible]. They [illegible] the clause stricken out and in its stead a clause drawn up leaving it to the individual to decide for himself.

Opposed to the striking out of the dance paragraph are many ministers who believe that to repeal the clause would be wrong because, they contend, that dancing would then be sanctioned by the Methodists, who have always discountenanced frivolity. They argue that should the order be repealed, great discredit would be brought upon the Methodists of New England and that the public would misunderstand the sentiment of the clergy.

Rev. William S. Warren, D. D., of Boston University is chairman of the committee of [illegible] upon whom it has devolved to draw up the memorial. He is unqualifiedly in favor of striking out the dancing paragraph.

Bishop Would Strike Out Clause

Bishop John W. Hamilton of Los Angeles, presiding officer of the conference, favors the removal of the dancing paragraph, as he believes that the individual should be permitted to use his judgment. When seen by a Sunday American reporter, Bishop Hamilton said:

"The supporters and advocates of the removal of the clause in paragraph No. 248 contend that Methodists should not be given a set of ironclad rules in regard to their actions. They wish to have the clause altered by striking out the phrase dealing with dancing and card playing, and inserting in its stead permission for the individual to decide."

LOSES $700 GEMS; PSSH! WHAT'S THAT

Miss Leona Lamar of the "Profesh" Dropped Her Sparklers and Declines Interview!!!

The blotter at police headquarters says easily that Miss Leona Lamar has $700 worth of two diamond earrings missing at the Hotel Rexford and this newspaper is in a position to state authoritatively that, up to a late hour last night, Miss Lamar had declined to be interviewed.

The theatre bugs who went through the weekly notices last Sunday on the theatre pages perceived that John Buckley and Leona Lamar are known to the "profesh" as Buckley and Lamar, wooden shoe artists. Team: Buckley and Lamar.

The week dragged along, and it was as dull at headquarters as it usually is except when some new suspect with a cast in either eye was reported in the Mullins case.

Selfish Desire of Police.

Last night—about 8:30 to be specific—the reporters detected an entry in the blotter to the effect taht Miss Leona Lamar, Hotel Rexford, had reported the loss of diamond earrings valued at $700.

Relentless questioning showed taht this report had been received at headquarters in the mid-morning, but that official red tape and a selfish desire on the part of the police to keep all the fat news for themselves had plugged this report for a whole day for the newspaper men.

Making a masterly approach on the Rexford, the newspapermen asked at the booking desk for Miss Lamar. A byestander said:

"You want Miss Lamar. I'm her partner."

"The diamonds"—gasped the reporter.

"We have been on at the Howard the past week in our dancing act. "We——"

"Where are the diamonds——" This from the impatient newsgatherers. One nervous reporter pulled out a watch and began figuring on the Roxbury and Jamaica Plain edition.

Appears at Bowdoin Too.

"We go on in the Sunday night concert at the Bowdoin—"

"Have yo nany clues—" Again the reporters.

"Square," continued Mr. Buckley, for it was none the less than he, calmly, "but I don't know as I can tell you about the gems. I'll speak to Miss Lamar. She's in the inner office talking with the manager of the hotel."

Through the glass partition the reporters saw Miss Lamar talking in unruffled manner with the hotel manager. She seemed as calm as the Shawmut bank after another absorption.

The reporters waited. Quietly Miss Lamar finished her conversation with the manager and, with the same equipoise started out doors and kept on going.

SPECIMEN BALLOT STIRS ALL WEBSTER

Webster, April 11.—Much discussion has been caused in this town because a specimen ballot, with all the names of the Republican candidates crossed, was allowed to remain posted in a public place within the gates of the S. Slater & Sons Manufacturing Company for several days prior to the Webster town election.

Although the mill authorities were obliged to pass the bulletin board daily where this marked ballot was posted, no report of its presence was made to the town authorities.

The fact that only the Republican candidates had a cross opposite their names on the specimen ballot is considered a significant fact.

The Massachusetts statutes provide that only six specimen ballots shall be allowed for each polling place, and that these must be posted in the polling places and nowhere else.

Originators of the Sale and Largest Dealers in the World in Merchant Tailors' Misfit and Uncalled-for Garments.

George's, New York, Established 1879

GEORGE'S TAILOR PARLORS

14 Summer Street

The sale of merchant tailors' misfit and uncalled for garments at one third the made to order price, while a feature new to Boston, we take pleasure [illegible] conducted in New York over 28 years. Its success there caused us to open a store in Philadelphia later. Now we have selected Boston as an additional outlet. We chose this city because it has a population of thrift and intelligence. It has thousands of happy dressers who can appreciate our offers [illegible] $15, $18, $20, $25, $30 and $35 [illegible] class Tuxedo Suits, Overcoats, Cravenettes, Full Dress and Tuxedo Suits, which were custom made for $45, $50, $55, $65, $75 and up to $100. While there is a short contrast in the prices we offer and those the tailors [illegible], that is a feature easily explained. When a tailor has garments left on his hands he has no means of disposing of them. He cannot sell to one patron the garments another refused. That would be spoiling a made-to-order custom. As THE CLEARING HOUSE he sends his uncalled for garments to us. We get them at one-third value and we get so many that we have to sell quick. This tells the story. Ours is a system of common sense and remarkable values, features which it will not take intelligent Boston long to appreciate.

Another Lot of Trust Pianos Sent in for Sacrifice!

ROXBURY
SALESROOMS

The recent financial stringency drove many fine pianos to our sacrifice floor. A man can get along without his high-class piano better than almost anything else in his house. During these "tight-money" times we have sold pianos for prices so low that it seemed to us that people could not believe our sacrifice quotations. Some of our prices do seem ridiculous, but sell we must and it's good hard cash that's wanted by the sellers—it's the seller's tough luck that makes the buyer's good luck. You owe it to yourself to investigate the sacrifice piano sales of the Roxbury Storage Salesrooms. This week will be a wonderful one for bargains.

$5 Down—$1 a Week

The gilded piano stores, with their costly appointments, their high-salaried sales agents, their sellers' commissions, etc., are no place for the economical piano buyer to go. Take the trouble to look around a little, go up where the rents are not so high and buy your piano right.

Use of this is free to our students or car owners looking for competent men. Write us today. Don't put this off. Give it your immediate attention.

See What Some of Our Graduates Say. Look These Men Up.

Mr. James F. Lane, Manager Boston Auto School:

Dear Sir—I want to thank you for the position you got for me driving the large Packard touring car, and assure you that I appreciate your kindness and also the kindness of the instructors of the Boston Auto School, of which I am a graduate, and if it ever comes my way to be able to speak a good word for you and the School you can rest assured that I shall be glad to do so.

Again thanking you for the interest taken in me and also the assistance you gave me in securing a good position, I remain,

Yours truly,
GEORGE L. COOK.

86 Pembroke St., Boston.

P. S.—Refer anybody that wants to know anything about the Boston Auto School to me.—G. L. C.

Boston Auto School, Boston:

Gents—The position you got for me is permanent, and as I have now had my job three years, I thank you kindly for the interest you have taken in me. I am more than pleased with the "Rainier" car that I am driving. Last Summer I drove the car over 14,000 miles, and I do all my own repair work. The doctor is more than pleased with the way I handle his car. Use this letter as you wish and refer any one you wish to me.

Yours truly,
ERNEST SWEED.

QUALITY

Every statement we make is backed up by the quality of our goods. No matter what you buy of us you get big value for your money. The one rule to observe in buying liquors through the mail is to buy of Holihan Bros. Then you needn't worry. The shipment will be careful and prompt. We have never lost sight of the fact that it pays to give our customers better treatment than they expect.

OUR FAMOUS
QUALITY COMBINATION

Of all the hits ever made by a combination of liquors the greatest has been made by this one. We keep on making new combinations according to the season, but this has the call all the time. If you do not already understand the reason why, send in an order.

BANQUET
RYE

This is an old-fashioned smooth Rye Whiskey of very high character. Our most particular trade call for it regularly, and, as we have stated before, it is pretty generally known as the gentleman's whiskey of New England. We are not afraid to recommend it to anybody.

4 FULL QUARTS,

OUR $2 WHISKEY

The demand for our $2.00 whiskey is steadily on the increase. This is a splendid blend which has proved to be just what many have been looking for.

4 FULL QUARTS $2.00

The Real Greenbrier

Our stock of Greenbrier is the genuine old style whiskey, Kentucky's finest. It was distilled by the Greenbrier Distilling Company of Nelson County, Kentucky and has been bottled in bond after having lain in the wood for 8 years. It is a great favorite in New England. Nothing better comes out of Kentucky. We have it in quarts, pints and half pints.

12 full quarts, express paid, $12.00

OLD COLONY RUM

The call for rum increases every day. The latest report of the Maine State Liquor Commissioner shows that rum makes up nearly one-third of the total amount of liquor consumed in the state. Some people have never indulged in any other liquor but rum. Old Colony Rum is the best $2.00 a gallon rum sold anywhere. We send 3 gallons express paid to your home for

HOLIHAN'S BIG THREE

Here is another case of quality. BLUE LABEL RUM, BLUE LABEL GIN and our SPECIAL XXX BLENDED RYE are full value and more than that. Compare them with any other liquors sold at a similar price and you will quickly see what we mean. These liquors are in a class by themselves. If they don't come up to our claims we refund your money. You can order these goods in any assortment you like at the following prices.

Single gallon - $2.50 2 gallons, express paid, - $5.00
3 gallons, express paid - $7.00

THINK THIS OVER

Our mail order business is our greatest pride. You ought to see our place of business—how neatly and carefully we put up all orders in plain packages, how quickly we ship them—a train going east with our goods every two hours, —and with what painstaking care we handle every order. The best way to test our statements is to send in a trial order.

CALIFORNIA WINES

These are choice wines, and you ought to keep some on hand. They are beverages of the highest quality, and medicinal as well. WE GIVE ALL THIS FOR $2.00:
A QUART OF PORT.
A QUART OF WHITE PORT.
A QUART OF WHITE TOKAY (A MEDICINAL WINE).
A QUART OF ANGELICA.

WE PREPAY EXPRESS

on all New England orders to the amount of $5.00 or over except those calling for alcohol and bottled beers. BOTTLE OF WINE FREE WITH EVERY ORDER.

IMPORTED BRANDY

Have you been fortunate enough to secure some of our recent importation of brandy? If not, would advise you to do so at once. It was a wise stroke on our part when we secured this importation of the celebrated J. DEVERNEY & COMPANY BRANDY. This comes from Cognac, France, and there is no better to be had. It is of the highest medicinal quality. We know that this brandy will not fail to satisfy your every expectation.

"OLD 56" Still Leads

We have said so many good things about "OLD 56" in the past it seems hard to say anything new. This old leader of ours is always just right—like a new laid egg, full of goodness. We could omit our reference to "OLD 56" in our advertising and still have a steady and enormous sale for it, for this whiskey has made so many friends that it would sell on its reputation for years. But we want YOU to know about it if you do not know about it already, so we urge you to order "OLD 56" at our prices.

Boston American's Course of Lessons FOR SALESPEOPLE

Review for Those Who Are Following This Course

Lessons Appear Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays

Review of Important Points in Last Week's Lessons

Copyright, 1908, by American-Journal-Examiner

Lesson Nineteen Do not make promises to a customer unless your are sure they will be fulfilled.

If in the matter of delivery of goods, do not promise any special effort unless you have found out positively from the proper persons whether it can be accomplished.

When goods are not in stock, but are on order, do not promise the customer that they will be in on a certain day unless you have positive information that they are expected.

Lesson Twenty Do not linger or re-enter into a discussion of merchandise after the sale is closed to the customer's satisfaction.

Finish with your customer and turn to another or some other duty as soon as your salescheck is made out, unless you are in a position where you can suggest some additional want of the customer.

Do not create doubts in the customer's mind by criticising merchandise on a sale that has been satisfactorily closed.

Lesson Twenty-one Customers are entitled to the benefit of your experience when they apparently wished to be guided in selecting goods.

When customers ask for a standard brand or advertised article do not attempt to substitute—as they usually know what they want, and are annoyed by substitution.

Put yourself in the customers' place and serve them as you would want to be served.

QUESTIONS TO ASK YOURSELF

Have I been rash in my promises to customers, thereby causing disappointment?

Do I keep posted as to goods on order and when they should be in, so as to be able to make correct statements to customers?

Have I lost sales by talking too much after the sale should have been closed?

Do I study my stock so as to be able to advise purchasers who are looking for advice?

Am I sufficiently interested in my customers' welfare to give them the benefit of my experience with the goods I am selling?

CUT OUT THE "LESSONS"

Every Sunday we print a review and self-examination of the lessons which appear during the week. A good plan is to clip the lessons and reviews out and paste them in a scrapbook. You will then have a manual on salesmanship that you could not buy for a good many dollars. It may be worth hundreds to you in increased salary.

Scarcely a day goes by that the American's salesmanship expert does not hear of several instances where students of this course have been benefited materially in their work by following out the suggestions contained in the lessons.

In several of the larger stores the junior help have taken up these lessons with real interest, and promotions have already followed in a number of cases which have been reported by store superintendents to this paper.

The demand for back numbers containing the lessons is still continuing, and these can be supplied at either of our offices, 80 Summer street or 264 Washington street.

Salespeople Who Succeed

Ideas Presented by the Superintendent of One of the Large Stores

(Written for the American)

The man who hires the help in any of the large stores must be a judge of human nature in the first place. Not that his judgment is always infallible, for it is not, but the fact remains that he usually judges the applicants for positions by certain established rules. These will be given here in part, and may well be considered by those who intend to apply for positions.

Personal appearance is a large factor in not only getting a position, but in holding one. Not good looking, but looking "good." There must be that personal neatness that always indicates a man or woman, boy or girl, who has sufficient self-respect to appear neat and cleanly.

Experience is, of course, most desirable, but in the hiring of inexperienced people the matter of references will largely enter into the question of hiring. When an applicant has creditable references as to honesty and character they will at least receive the attention of the man who is looking for store help.

With such references, even though they bear entirely upon character and not experience, the intelligent person, with an ambition to go ahead showing itself, will not find it difficult to get a position.

Just what that situation offers at the start is less important than the fact that it is a start. Often in hiring people it is merely a try-out of the applicant, and in a few weeks the person may find themselves in a position very much more congenial and encouraging than the first one offered.

Every superintendent is striving to get the best results from his selling force and the ambitious salespersons find that they can and will succeed along the lines that they desire to if they keep their purpose fixed.

The salesperson who takes his or her superintendent, manager or employer into his confidence as to his ambitions and ideas are those who will get help in their work. Some of the best and most successful clerks in the stores are those who started in positions much less desirable, but who kept their eyes open for something their judgment told them was better. When the right time came they went to their superior and told him what they wanted and why they wanted it and usually the desired result was obtained. Then in a congenial and satisfactory environment the best development of the salesperson's vocation was possible.

The salesperson who succeeds is the one who is not only alive to the possibilities of his or her position, but who also keeps in view the fact that the future is only reached by the good use of the present. There are dozens and dozens of instances of men whose names are familiar to all of us as foremost merchants who began in most humble positions in stores. Perhaps some of these in their most rosy dreams never dreamt of owning an establishment of their own, yet they did their duties in each successive step so well that they were ready for the next one when it came.

The joy of the superintendent, manager or proprietor is the salesperson whose book shows a constant and healthy increase in sales and whose interest in the store's welfare is evidenced by suggestions and helpful activity in promoting the business. This salesperson not only has a hold on his or her position, but will get the first chances for advancement as they occur.

News of the Stores.

At the GILCHRIST CO.'S store the mail order department is now in charge of Mr. G. R. Stimpson, Jr. During the few weeks that he has been there he has made several changes, and is assisted in his work by an able corps of young ladies.

Mr. Eugene L. Ashley of Glens Falls, N. Y., and a member of the firm of the Gilchrist Co., was in town during the past week.

Mr. G. N. Keizer of the dress goods department at Gilchrist Co.'s has been at home, suffering from the grip.

Miss Alice Wheeler, stenographer in the advertising office at Gilchrist Co.'s, has been confined to her home for the past week, suffering from a bad attack of bronchitis. During her absence the position is being filled by Miss Drinan.

Miss Margaret Todd of the office force at Gilchrist Co.'s is taking a vacation. She will be absent for several weeks.

Mr. John Swain has again returned to the Gilchrist Co.'s store, having left there last Fall to return to his native home, England. But he somehow likes the atmosphere around the Gilchrist Co., and that is why he did not remain away so very long.

Miss Ida Stebbens of the shoe department at Gilchrist Co.'s has the sympathy of many friends in the loss of her brother, who died in Dorchester during the past week.

The suggestion committee at Gilchrist Co.'s, which held its regular monthly meeting Tuesday, is the means of getting many little necessaries in the form of improvements added to the store from time to time, and they are all appreciated.

Mr. Arthur Baisley, floor manager in the millinery department at Gilchrist Co.'s, is still confined to his home with an abscess in his head, and it is thought that an operation will be necessary.

Miss Mary Cameron was a caller at the Gilchrist Co.'s during the past week. She was until last Fall employed in the jewelry department at the store, but on account of ill health she was obliged to leave. She has now returned to her home, feeling fine, and will ere long, we hope, be back in her familiar place.

Miss Blanche MacDonald, who was formerly in charge of the umbrella department at Gilchrist Co.'s, has for the past six months been in Nova Scotia for the benefit of her health. Miss MacDonald was in the store for a short time the first of the week, and was given a warm reception by her friends.

Mrs. L. D. F. Marston of the ladies' belt department at Gilchrist Co.'s returned to her work on Monday morning after an absence of a couple of weeks. Since she returned she has been receiving congratulations, for while she was away she was married. She was formerly Miss Mabel Warren.

Miss Violet Goodwin of the lace department at Gilchrist Co.'s is still confined to her home, having been ill for a couple of weeks.

At a special meeting, held in the recreation room of the Gilchrist Co. on Tuesday morning, the following were chosen an athletic committee for the ensuing year: Chairman, Mr. H. B. Lowe; manager, Mr. J. MacInnis; assistant manager, Mr. J. B. Hartford; secretary, Mr. H. Locke; treasurer, Mr. R. H. Hearts. Manager MacInnis is getting the boys together for their Spring baseball practice.

At the R. H. WHITE CO. an interesting feature has been lately introduced in the furniture department. This is the showing of their high-grade furniture, complete as it would be seen in a room. For instance, as one steps from the elevator, there is a cosey little den, all complete with desk, centre table, big comfortable chairs, bookcase, in fact, every detail, down to beautiful electroliers lighted and books on the table and in the bookcase.

The friends and acquaintances of Miss Mattie Evans, of the R. H. White smallwares department will be glad to know she has returned to her duties after an illness.

Miss Bernice Meriam of the toilet goods department, and Miss Helen Lee of the leather goods department, have also returned to their respective places after an absence of some time, caused by illness.

The Mutual Benefit Association of the R. H. White Co. is at present in a most successful condition, and new members are constantly swelling the enrolment list.

Mr. Tracey, formerly of the millinery department, is now representing J. C. Stott of 496 Washington street, this city.

Mr. Eugene Hodgkinson, connected with the R. H. White Co. fur department during the past season, is now representing E. I. Martin of this city.

Part of the space occupied during the winter season by the beautiful display of Oriental rugs at the R. H. White Co., is now used for the showing of new and up-to-date summer floor coverings, such as mattings, linoleums, oil cloths and carpetings. The department is gaily decorated with large Japanese parasols, lanterns, flags of China and Japan, etc., giving a most pleasing effect.

At SHEPARD NORWELL COMPANY, Mr. Bruce H. Norwell, buyer of the silk department, has received two handsome English beagles, which were shipped on the Saxonia from England, arriving in Boston last Saturday. He expects to forward them to the Norwell Plantation in Apopka, Florida, very shortly.

Mrs. Margaret Mahoney of the ecclesiastical bureau at Shepard Norwell Company, is spending the week end as the guest of her sister in Cohasset.

Mr. Edward E. Cole, vice-president of Shepard Norwell Company, has departed for the South, where he is enjoying a much-needed rest.

Miss Katherine H. Moriarty of the lace department at Shepard Norwell Company has returned after a two months' illness from appendicitis, and her many friends are delighted to have her familiar face among them once again.

The immense cluster of grape-fruit which had been on exhibition at the Shepard Norwell Company store, has been presented to Mr. Caleb Chase, of Chase & Sanborn.

Mr. James Finnie, buyer of the linen and white goods department, has returned after a successful business trip to New York. He brought home with him some rare specimens of strawberry plants to add to his already large collection for his farm at East Milton.

Mr. James Duffy of the contract department, will again make his appearance at the banquet board of the Luncheon Club, next Wednesday evening at the Crawford House.

At the JAMES A. HOUSTON CO.'S store some rather extensive alterations are being made, including a new stock room for the shirt waist department.

Miss Agnes O'Brien of the underwear department of James A. Houston Company store is about to take a week's vacation at Peak's Island, Me., where her family has a Summer home.

Mr. Walter C. Gregory, who for some months past has been in the linen department of the James A. Houston Company, has been promoted to the position of floor-manager in the silk department.

Miss Esther Green of the jewelry department, who has been confined to her home for the past two weeks with blood poison, is reported out of danger.

Mr. John Ellingwood, for some time floor manager in the silk and dress goods departments, has been transferred back to his old section in the shoe department, much to the delight of his former associates.

It is with regret that the many employes of the James A. Houston Company have learned of Mr. John S. Bachman's resignation as buyer of the linens and domestics. Mr. Bachman, with two other enterprising men, is about to open a store in Lowell.

Miss May Lovell, one of the young ladies in the shirt waist department, has been transferred to the millinery department.

Mr. William Daly, buyer of the dress goods, while on a recent visit to New York inspected the pumping station at High Bridge, afterwards taking in the sights at Fort George.

Mrs. Rosnosky, buyer of waists and costumes, and Miss Murphy, buyer of muslin underwear and petticoats, have returned from the market with attractive offerings for Easter.

At the HENRY SIEGEL CO., owing to the fact of the largely increased floor space for boats, canoes, launches, they have been forced to discontinue until further notice their free lessons in pyrography, which have been given under the competent instructorship of Miss A. McMillian, who is now enjoying a vacation.

Friends were very much surprised the other morning when Miss Mary Usher, connected with the main office Henry Siegel Co., came into the office with a happy smile and a unusual cheery "Good morning." They soon found out, however, the cause in the form of a diamond ring which she had received the evening before. The engagement has not yet been announced.

Mr. Harry Hollander, chief of the Henry Siegel Co.'s housefurnishing bazar, and Mr. Sam Aronson, the men's clothing buyer, will at last settle a long standing bowling controversy.

Mr. Joseph F. McEnroe, of the main office, Henry Siegel Co., is very busily engaged during his spare moments inseiving to his friends tickets for a grand May party of the Appolo Club, to be held at Upham's Corner on the evening of May fourth.

Miss Cecilia Fehon, artist on the Henry Siegel Co.'s advertising staff, left a few days ago presumably for a vacation. However, it is rumored that a marriage license has been recently issued in New York city bearing her name as one of the contracting parties. Her Boston friends are eagerly awaiting her return and are fully prepared to receive her with appropriate ceremony.

DR. MUCK AGAIN LEADS AT CONCERT

With such a strong counter-attraction as grand opera, last night's symphony suffered as far as the size of the audience was concerned, but otherwise it was up to its usual high standard.

Dr. Muck, whose absence last week was much regretted, conducted the first three numbers and was heartily greeted. He is still unable to use his right hand, and did his directing with the left.

Mr. Wendling, who conducted last week lead the orchestra through the Hadley Symphony No. 3 which was played last night for the first time in America and was given with splendid effect, Mr. Wendling showing great care for details and many evidences of strong tempermental feeling.

The first number on the program was Mozart's overture to the opera, "The Marriage of Figaro," in which Dr. Muck demonstrated his ability as a sensitive and sincere interpreter.

CITY PRINTING LOSSES $18,434

Plant Cost This Sum in Last Year of Fitzgerald Administration.

That the municipal printing plant during the year 1907, the last year of the Fitzgerald administration, was operated at a loss to the city of $9,980, due to extravagance and wastefulness, was the report made to Mayor Hibbard yesterday by Patterson, Teele & Dennis, a firm of public accountants engaged to make an investigation of the operation of the plant since its foundation in 1897. This is the loss shown without making any charges for depreciation of the plant, replacements of type or interest on the capital investments, the normal provisions for which, the report states, would increase the loss for the year to $18,434.42.

"Conducted on a strictly business basis and free from political influence," the report states, "the plant should show a profit sufficient to provide for interest on the capital invested in it, and for the creation of a sinking fund to reimburse the city for the capital expenditure upon it."
